PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

In offering this Grammar of the Pushto to the Orientalist and the Student, as well as to those who may take an interest in the hardy, warlike, and independent race who speak the Afghān language, I deem it necessary to state, that the idea of the following pages originated in my being under the necessity of making a Grammar for my own convenience, during the years 1849 and 1850, when stationed at Peshāwer with my Regiment, which formed part of the Bombay Division of the Army of the Panjāb in the late campaign.

Having a deal of leisure time on my hands, and imagining that by studying the peculiar and little known language of the Afghāns, an Officer might be considered in some measure qualified for employment where the Pushto is spoken, I determined to try to acquire some knowledge of this dialect, the mastery of which had never been attempted, except by the late Major Leech, of the Bombay Engineers, and (as I have since found) Professor Bernhard Dorn, of St. Petersburgh.

Unable to obtain or discover anything like a guide to the grammatical rules of the language, a matter to which the Afghāns of the present day appear to have paid no attention, I commenced my studies with the poems of Mullā Æabdur-Raḥmān. I did not find them very difficult, or even so much so as I had expected; for I had the advantage—if such there be in knowing Oriental languages—of possessing some proficiency in Persian, and some acquaintance with Arabic and other tongues.* Still there were difficulties to contend with; and I was obliged to make a sort of outline Grammar, which was filled in as I advanced, and examples compared and selected.

I had fortunately at the outset secured the services of an Afghān of Hāsht-nagar, in the Doāba of Peśhāwer—a Molawī of the Muḥammadzo'e tribe—a man well acquainted with his mother-tongue, and a first-rate Arabic scholar, and who was for some time Lieut. R. F. Burton's teacher. I had also in my service a clever Mīrzā,—a native of Kandahār, who is well acquainted with the Puśhto dialect, having been born and bred in the Western capital.

* By the Orders of the Government of India, I was awarded the sum of 1000 Rupees, by the Governor in Council of Bombay, for proficiency in the Urdū, Persian, Murāṭī, and Guzerāṭī languages; in all four of which I have passed the Presidency Examination as Interpreter on four different occasions—somewhat superior, I flatter myself, to the so-called test for the "Higher Standard" Civil Examination in the Panjāb. During twelve years' service, I have devoted ten to the study of the above, and to the Arabic, Pushto, Sindī, Panjābī, and Multānī languages.

In 1850 I was obliged to leave Peśhāwer with my Regiment for the Dekhan, but my teachers accompanied me, and have remained in my service ever since. Although some portion of my time was taken up in preparing for the ordeal of the Presidency Examinations, as Interpreter in Murātī and Guzerāṭī, I continued to persevere in my Puśhto studies; and by Midsummer, 1852, I had prepared a somewhat copious Grammar of the language.

This humble effort I had the honour of submitting to the Most Noble the Governor-General in July, 1852; and, by His Lordship's command, it was sent to the late Panjāb Board of Administration for that body's opinion as to its publication. From thence I believe it reached the late Commissioner of Peshāwer (by the Board's order) to be reported on by "competent Judges."

I was not aware that Pushto had been made the subject of general study at Peshāwer, nor that any parties, with the exception of those I have referred to in a former paragraph—one of whom died some ten years since, and the other, a resident in the Russian capital—had ever turned their attention to, much less pretended to such a knowledge of the Afghān language, as to render them for a moment "competent judges." Who these "competent judges" were—who must have grown spontaneously in that district—and the opinion they arrived at, I have not yet discovered. What became of the MS. may be easily imagined.

The only copy which I had made was forwarded about the same time to the Government of Bombay, and laid before the Hon'ble the Court of Directors. Nine months afterwards I received a letter stating that the Hon'ble Court had been pleased to direct that my Grammar should be printed at Bombay at the public expense, provided no other work of a similar nature might have been already undertaken by the Supreme Government.

It appears that an Officer of the Bengal Army some time previously had offered to prepare a Grammar of the Pushto language, and had obtained a promise from one of the late Lahore Board to the effect that it should be printed at the expense of Government. In January, 1853, the Officer here referred to and myself chanced to be at the same station, at which time he first became aware that I had been in the field before him; and, therefore, he lost no time in submitting his work to the Lahore Authorities. For the reasons above stated his work was printed, and has been before the public for some months;* and consequently the instructions of the Hon'ble Court as regarded my MS. could not be earried out. His work, of course, had not to undergo the ordeal of the "competent judges."

Blessed, however, with some patience, and a good stock of perseverance and industry, I was not to be disheartened by this strange and significant procedure of the Lahore Board, or, at least, of one of its members, neither at the loss of the labour of a couple of years,—in truth, I rather rejoice now, for it has made me go deeper into Pushto than I might otherwise have done; and "he who entertains the hope of winning a decisive battle, will not mind the loss of a few skirmishes, in order to arrive at the end he aimed at." I again went to work with greater industry than before; and during the six years which I have devoted to the study of the language of the Afghāns, the materials have naturally accumulated, and have now assumed a somewhat bulky volume. Whether these six years have been spent profitably or not, remains to be seen. I have at least gained the satisfaction of having, I trust, rescued from oblivion, and shed some light on, the language of a manly race, "the literary exertions of whose authors, and some of whose odes, would stand the severest criticism of European judges."*

A short time since, two gentlemen connected with the Asiatic Society of Bengal offered, in the most handsome manner, to undertake the publication of this Grammar; and one of them (whose disinterested liberality I can never forget) volunteered to bear any loss that might be sustained, rather than the work should remain unpublished. The patronage of the Government of India, of the North-West Provinces, and of Bombay, who have subscribed for a number of copies; as well as the great support, as the list of subscribers will show, of the Officers of the United Service and others, will, however, preclude the possibility of any loss in a pecuniary point of view.

The work professes to be a Grammar of the language of the children of Afghānah—whether Eastern or Western—whether Sarraban, Gharghasht, or Karlārrnī—Bar Pukhtūn or Lar Pukhtūn—Panjpā'o or Zīruk; and is not confined to the "Pooshtoo of the Trans-Indus Territories under British Rule," but applies wherever the Pushto may be the medium of communication.

I have endeavoured to lay down the clearest, and, at the same time, most simple rules, the whole of which I have illustrated by carefully selected examples from the works of the most elegant—as well as the most standard—authors, both poetical and prose, the greater number of whose works are seldom to be met with at the present day. I have adduced nothing but what has been proved by the extracts given, avoiding examples made up for the occasion, not wishing to make the work a mere category of provincialisms. Nothing has been advanced but what has been accounted for and explained, as well as tested and supported by the "dictum," not only of a "Mullā," but of every writer in the Pushto language.†

The Introduction contains some remarks on the origin and affinity of the Afghān to the dead languages of Asia, and the Hebrew origin of the children of Æabd-ur-Rashīd, Pattān; together with remarks on the literature of the Afghāns, and other matter regarding the language.

In the Appendix will be found a specimen translation of the Articles of War for the Native Army; and a few difficult and idiomatical stories, intended to show the capabilities of the dialect, and the mode of construction.

The character used is that peculiar to the language—the Naskh character of the Arabic; and the types for the extra letters, exclusively Pushto, have been cut expressly for this volume.

The particular parts of speech or matters referred to in the various examples in the following pages, are printed in small capitals in the English, and its corresponding Pushto word or words with a line over them. It was intended to have had these words printed in red ink, which, although an easy matter to an European, is an insuperable difficulty to an Indian Press.

I must crave the patience of my readers with respect to the long list of corrections; and I fear I shall searcely be credited, when I state that each sheet has been revised no less than three times, and which has been the principal cause of the great delay in the publication of the work.

I propose giving a Persian translation of this Grammar, for the convenience of natives who may wish to acquire a knowledge of Pushto, should a sufficient number of subscribers be forthcoming.

The opportunity for the renewal of friendly intercourse with the Afghāns, as advocated in the Introduction, page 25, has happened sooner than expected, and appears to have been cordially embraced. It cannot fail to be highly advantageous to both nations.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

THE flattering manner in which the First Edition of this work was received by the public, and its rapid exhaustion, has rendered it necessary to print a New Edition, uniform with the Dictionary and Text Book.

I have taken the opportunity thus offered to correct the numerous press errors in the former edition, which was printed at Calcutta, and to improve the work materially.

The Chapters on the Nouns and Adjectives have been considerably extended.

INTRODUCTION.

"I am not willing that any language should be totally extinguished; the similitude and derivation of languages afford the most indubitable proof of the traduction of nations, and the genealogy of mankind; they add often physical certainty to historical evidence of ancient migrations, and the revolutions of ages which left no written monuments behind them."

Dr. Johnson.

In all investigations into the manners and customs of mankind, language has a strong claim to our attention and study. It will be found, in various ways, so unerring a guide that we may term it the barometer of a people's civilization or barbarity; whilst, on the other hand, the derivation and affinity of different tongues afford an indisputable proof of the origin and genealogy of the various families of the human race. It also adds a physical certainty to historical evidence; and no authority can so indubitably determine the peculiar habits and pursuits of a people as the manner in which their thoughts and ideas are articulated and expressed; for want of copiousness, or poverty of a language, as it may be termed, generally indicates an uncivilized state—ignorance and superstition.

By oral means alone can a dialect be formed or extended, but its subsequent cultivation must depend on writing and literature; and knowledge, on which civilization, refinement, and everything that tends to raise mankind above the level of the brute, depends, must naturally be confined within exceedingly narrow limits, until a written language has diffused it throughout all classes of mankind.

Before venturing to offer an opinion as to the origin of the Pushto language, it will be necessary to make a few observations respecting the topography, as it may be termed, of the ancient languages of Asia, more particularly those from which we may naturally suppose the Pushto or Afghān language to have sprung: still all researches into high antiquity are more or less involved in darkness and perplexity, and every argumentative inquiry, however ingenious, must at last rest on the uncertain basis of conjecture and fancy.

We learn from the accounts given by Herodotus, and other ancient writers, that in certain countries of no great extent, various languages, totally distinct from each other, were used; whilst, on the other hand, the same language, with slight variations in its dialects, was spoken throughout vast regions. The first remarks are applicable to nearly all mountainous districts, inhabited, like Afghānistān, by different tribes, for the most part independent of each other.

Throughout the boundless steppes of the Asiatic continent were spread the more prevalent languages. The limits of the various dialects also were the same stupendous ranges of mountains, and the same noble and mighty rivers, which formed the boundaries of the different territories. Between the Attak or Indus, the Æmān or Oxus, and the banks of the Dajlah or Tigris, one language appears to have predominated; a second from the Tigris to the Halys or Kizil Irmāk; and a third between the Halys and the Ægean sea.

To commence with the language which appears to have been most widely prevalent in ancient times, we find that, from the Caucasian* range of mountains on the north to the Red Sea on the south, and from the banks of the Euphrates on the east to the Halys on the west, one mighty tongue was spoken, which, with some slight variations, retained a primitive and distinct character, known as the Semitic, and of which the Arabic, Assyrian, Chaldaic, Cappadocian, Hebrew, Sarmatian, and Phænician were merely dialects.†

From the Tigris eastward, as far as the mountain range which forms the western barrier of the Indus, and from the Oxus to the Indian sea, another great language prevailed, the various dialects of which, both in elements and construction, as also in vocabulary and phraseology, were so totally distinct as to preclude the possibility of their being of the same family as the Semitic. One peculiar feature of the ancient dialects of the immense tract which constituted the Persian empire is, that every vowel, whether short or long, has a distinct character. We are indebted to the labours of several eminent scholars in Zend literature for much important information on this subject, particularly from the work known as the "Zend Avesta" the sacred volume of the Parsis or Gabrs, two English translations of which are about to be given to the world—one by a European Orientalist, the other by an Asiatic, and a disciple of Sapetman Zoroaster. From these researches we find that three different languages, which followed each other successively, were spoken in Iran:—the Zend, in which the sacred books of their religion were written; the Pehlavī; and the ancient Persian, or Pārsī. The date from which the Zend ceased to be the medium of conversation is unknown; but, as early as the reign of Bahman, the Pehlavi was considered rude, and on this account in disrepute at the court of that ruler; \{\} and in the reign of Bahram Gur, \|\| in the fifth century of our cra, was

A cording to the Ferang Jehangiri, Bahman also called Ardashir, was son of Islandiar, son of Kashtasib, son of Lobrasib. Some say he was so called for his aprightness and justice; others, that it was from his precociousness as a child; and there gain, that it was on account of the length of his arms, which were so long that his hands reached his knees. There are no less than thurse a manager given to this word in the work I have quoted. Bahman died a.b. 240.

proscribed by edict, and soon after fell into total disuse. After this event the Pārsī became the idiom of Persia. It was divided into two dialects—the Derī, or court language, and the Pārsī, which was spoken by the people at large. The Shāh Nāmah of Ferdousī is almost entirely written in the former tongue.

If we compare these dialects with the modern Persian, divested of the Arabic and Turkish, which, during a period of several centuries have crept into it, we shall find them differing essentially in several respects; but at the same time, in phraseology and construction, bearing such a striking similarity, as to prove almost indubitably that the dialects themselves, as also the people who spoke them, must have sprung from one and the same original stock.

It is a striking fact that no convulsions of Government, no efforts of literature, can so alter a language as to destroy every atom of similarity between the speech of the present day and that of most ancient and remote origin. Nothing but the total extirpation of the aborigines of a country appears capable of accomplishing so singular and wonderful a change. For a striking instance of this we have merely to look to the present dialects of the peninsula of India, or, for a still more conclusive proof, to the modern European languages, amidst the polish and refinement of Latin and Greek.

It appears, therefore, that the principal languages of the Asiatic continent, or, of what was considered Asia by the ancients, were the Semitic, and the Irānīan or Persian:* the last was spoken as far as the western bank of the Indus, beyond which the Sanskrit and Prākrit commenced.†

In ancient times, as in the present day, the greatest diversity of language appears to have prevailed in mountain tracts, generally inhabited by a number of independent tribes, who may either have been aborigines of those mountains, or strangers compelled to seek in them refuge from powerful neighbours, or security from invasion and subjection to a foreign yoke. In the absence of facilities for communication with other races, the languages of these mountaineers have been less liable to be mixed up with other tongues; but as their more numerous tribes separated into smaller septs, a variety of dialects was naturally formed, which, in many points, differed from each other.

The ancient languages of Persia suggest other important facts not to be passed over without notice, and which also bring us to the point to which these straggling and imperfect remarks are intended to lead—that not merely in the modern Persian territory do we find languages which still exist, mixed up with others, and only preserved from oblivion by a few written remains; but that in the present day there is also a language spoken immediately west of the Indus, which is totally different in phraseology and construction from any modern tongue, and in all probability derived from the Zend, Pehlavī, and the Hebrew. The language to which I refer is the Pukhto, Pushto, or Afghān.

Languages, though they may be cultivated by writing and literature, can alone be fashioned and extended by oral use; and it is therefore certain that the dead languages of the Asiatic continent must at one time have been generally spoken,* because several living languages are evidently derived from them.+ They may have ceased to be the medium of oral communication in various ways: intercourse with foreigners, subjugation to the yoke of others, and such like circumstances, so affect a language as to produce various new dialects, which, as proved in the case of our own mother-tongue, are capable of undergoing still further transformation.

There has, perhaps, never been a greater diversity of opinion respecting the descent of any people than in reference to that of the Afghāns. Ferishtah‡ traces their origin to the Copts, whilst most Oriental writers are of opinion that they are of the Jewish family. According to Klaproth, Gatterrer considers the Afghāns to be a Georgian race, and their language Georgian also. The Armenians hold the Afghāns to be descended from themselves; and Krusinsky, Reineggs, and several other European historians, notwithstanding the want of proof, hold the same opinion. Major Keppel § (the late Earl of Albemarle) states that the people of Shīrwān and the adjoining countries consider the Afghāns are descended from them. St. Martin, in his account of the Armenian Arghowans, is of opinion that the Afghāns cannot be identified with them. Other authors have declared them to be descendants of the Indū-Seythians, the Medians, the Soghdians, Turks, Tārtars, and Monghols.

The Afghāns themselves persist in their descent from the Jews; and their traditions on the subject trace their ancestry to Saul, king of Israel.**

The best account I have met with on the subject has lately fallen into my hands quite unexpectedly. It is contained in a history of the house of Saddo or Suddozo'e tribe of the Afghāns. The work itself is written in Svo., 640 pages of 17 lines to a page, and entitled Tazkirāt-ul-Mulūk. It is very rare, and I imagine there is not a copy to be found east of the Indus, even if it has ever been heard of before by Europeans. Two-thirds of the entire work are occupied in the detail of events which have happened since the death of Ahmad Shāh, Abdālī. The commencement alone is sufficient for my present purpose; on some future occasion I may give a translation of that part which terminates with the death of the founder of the Dūrānī monarchy. I may also add, that the work is written in Pushto. The account is as follows:—

"The chief object of the author in writing this august work, was the compilation of a history of the ancestors of the tribe of Saddo, known as the Suddozo'es,* who, after the family of the last of the Prophets, (on whom be the blessing of the Almighty!) are the greatest and best, as well as the most generous and open-hearted of the children of Adam.

"All traditions and histories agree, as to their exalted descent from the Ban-i-Isrā-īl, of whom their great ancestor is Malik Tālūt (Saul) of the tribe of Isrā-īl, who afterwards became the ruler of that people. From Malik Tālūt is descended Afghān, one of the greatest of God's creatures, and who in the reign of Sūlīmān, was, by that monarch, made sovereign of the Jinns and Dīws.

"From Malik Afghān, Æabd-ur-Rashīd bin Ķais al Laik, who was a contemporary of the prophet of God, and one of his most honoured associates, is a lineal descendant. He is the ancestor of the Sarrabands, who are considered the first of the Afghān tribes, as also of the twelve āstānas or families who were formerly considered as hereditary devotees.†

"His Highness Saddo chief of the Afghans, being the fruit of the tree of that garden, and a blossom of that rose tree, this account of his ancestry has been compiled, to the end that their fame may be known to posterity.

'What can we inherit but fame beyond the limits of the tomb?'

"The following histories and authorities have been consulted in the composition of the work, viz.:—Tārikh-i-Salāṭīn-i-Sūreah; Ṭābakāt-i-Akbarī; Aæn-i-Akbarī; Mirāt-ul-Afaghanah, which work was written by Khān Jehān, Lūdī, in the reign of the Emperor Jehāngīr; Tārīkh-i-Shāhān-i-Ṣafāwīah, Irānī; Shāh Jehān Nāmah; Tārīkh Ālamgīrī; Furukh Seorī; Tārīkh-i-Maḥommed Shāhī; Nādīr Nāmah; Tārīkh Aḥmad Shāhī; Rassālah Akbār, Khadakah; and other information has been collected from the narratives of trustworthy persons. I have entitled the work, Tazkirāt-ul-Mulūk, of the ancestry of the tribe of Saddo, the chief of the Afghāns. It consists of one mukaddamah (preface), two aṣals (originals), and one khūtīmah (epilogue)."‡

"The great ancestor of this tribe is Malik Tālūt (Saul) who is mentioned in the Kur'ān and other works, as descended from Binyāmīn bin Yaæķūb, bin Isḥ'āķ, bin Ibrāhīm (may the blessing of the Almighty rest on them and on their house!) Tālūt was celebrated amongst his countrymen for his wisdom, knowledge, and mightiness in war; and the All-wise Creator of the Universe made him king over Isrā-īl, and commanded him to bring to perdition the infidel Jālūt (Goliath), the enemy of his people.*

"At this time Mehtar† Dā'ūd, who dwelt in the district situated between the territories of the rival princes, went and joined the army of his countrymen,‡ who were hard pressed by the superior army of Jālūt.\$ The king on this account issued a proclamation to the effect, that whoever would go forth to fight with Jālūt and kill him, should receive the hand of the king's daughter in marriage, and be declared heir to the throne.

But they who considered that they should meet God at the resurrection, said, How often hath a small army, by the will of God, defeated a greater one and discomfited it, for God is with those who patiently persevere. "After this action on the part of Mehtar Dā'ūd, it became incumbent on king Tālūt to fulfil the terms of the covenant which he had made, and accordingly he gave his daughter to Dā'ūd in marriage, and a patent of succession to the throne.

"During the life-time of king Tālūt, Dā'ūd served him faithfully, and at his death succeeded him. Armīah (Jeremiah) and Birkīya, Tālūt's sons, were raised to the highest honors, became the captains of his armies, and continued in his service during their life-time.

"In the common course of events, Dā'ūd himself set out on that journey from which no traveller returneth, and was succeeded by his son Sūlīmān. He appointed Afghānah, the son of Armīah, to the command of his armies, and the government of the Jinns and Dīws; whilst Āṣif, the son of Tālūt's son Birkīya, was made his principal minister.†

It is near the town of Darāban and west of the Sindhu (Indus) river.

"Pleased with the spot, and the salubrity of the climate, The Wisest of Men directed his minister to form a seat out of a stone which was at hand. This being almost immediately done, Sūlīmān sat in it for some time and enjoyed the beauty of the landscape which lay spread out at his feet. The mountain is known at present as the Takht, or Throne, of Sūlīmān. A portion of the throne still remains, to which the people of the surrounding districts are in the habit of making pilgrimages.

"The mountain tract of Kaseghar, and the district of Rūdah, were assigned in feudal tenure to Afghānah.

"The original meaning of the word Afghānah is fighān—a Persian word, which means 'complaint,' 'lamentation,' because he was a cause of lamentation to the devil, the jinns, and mankind. From the constant use of the word, the vowel point (—) kasrah was dropped, after which the other letters could not be sounded without the aid of a vowel, and alif-i-waṣl was placed before the gh, and thus made Afghānah.

He fixed his residence at a place named Puśht or Paśht, situated in the mountains; and from the name of this place the people have derived the name of Puśhtūn, or Pukhtūn, and their language Puśhto, or Pukhto. Some traditions state that the Afghāns acquired their language from the Dīws; and others, that it is the original dialect of the aboriginal inhabitants of Kaseghar, and that the Afghans were in the habit of carrying off the wives and daughters of those infidels, and intermarrying with them,* thereby learning from them the Puśhto language, and in course of time forgetting their own Ibrahāmī tongue."†

Again, to use the words of the author, "Malik Afghān having purified the face of the mistress of that country from the filth of the wicked infidels by the pure water of the sword; and having given unto her the rouge of beneficence, and decked her out in the bridal garments of religion and the ornaments of Islām, bestowed her in the marriage of possession to one of his sons; after which he returned to the court of king Sūlīmān, at Bait-ul-Mukaddas,‡ where at length he died at a very advanced age. His descendants, from generation to generation, and from tribe to tribe, continued to dwell round about the mountain of Kaseghar, and to rule over it; and were constantly at war with the infidels, as the neighbouring people were termed.

"At length, during the chieftainship of Æabd-ur-Rashīd bin Kais al Laik, an event happened which was the cause of shaking the world to its very foundations — the joyful tidings of the last and greatest of the Prophets, resounded both in Arab and in Ajam too; and Æabd-ur-Rashīd became desirous of making a pilgrimage to Makka for the purpose of seeing him:—

'Love ariseth not alone from seeing the object; This wealth is often acquired by mere conversation.'

"In company with several of his kinsmen and friends, he set out for the Hedjāz; and having arrived at Makka, performed his pilgrimage according to the rites and tenets of the religion of his forefathers, Isrā-īl, Isḥ'āk, and Ibrāhīm.* He now set out for Madīnah, and on the road fell in with the celebrated Khālid-ibn-Wālid, 'The Sword of God,'—to whom he explained the object of his journey. They travelled towards Madīnah in company, and on his arrival there, Æabd-ur-Rashīd became a convert to Islām. In the numerous struggles of that period, he became conspicuous for his intrepid bravery, which made the Prophet bestow on him the surname of paṭān or paṭān,+ which in Arabic‡ means the keel of a vessel, without which it cannot sail, neither can the ship of war sail along without the keel of battle.

"Æabd-ur-Rashīd having acquired great renown, at length obtained his dismissal, and was allowed by the Prophet to return to his native land; but was at the same time enjoined to publish and diffuse the doctrines of Islāmism amongst his countrymen. He departed from Madīnah, and in due course reached his home in safety, after which he converted his family and tribe to the new faith, and taught them the Kur'ān. He made war on the infidels with greater zeal than ever, and was celebrated for his piety. At length, finding his end approaching, he called his family and tribe around him, and enjoined them to keep their hearts fixed on the only true religion, and their feet firm in the path of Islām; to show friendship and obedience to the followers of Muḥammad; and to make war on the infidels, and convert them to the only true faith. After taking an affectionate leave of all, the swallow of his soul, having escaped from the wintry cage of this world, took its flight towards the summer mansions of eternal bliss.

"He was blessed with three sons—Sarī, Gharī, and Tabrī. The first, known as Sarraban, or Sarrabarm, succeeded his father in the chieftainship, and gave name to one of the two great divisions of the Afghāns, called Sarrabans. The second also, called Gharghasht, gave name to the Gharghashts. The descendants of these three sons constitute the whole of the different Afghān clans, with their numerous branches and ramifications.

"The tribes which are included in the Sarraban division are:—Abdālī, Tarīn, Barech, Mabānah, Gharshīn, Shīrānī, Bābarr, Kānsī, Jamand, Kātanī, Kalīānī, Tarkānī, Khalīl, Muhmand, Dā'ūdzo'e, and Yūsufzo'e. * The temple of Mecca was a place of worship, and in singular veneration with the Arabs from great antiquity, and many centuries before Muhammad. Though it was most probably dedicated at first to an idolatrous use, yet the Muhammadans are generally persuaded that the Caaba is almost coeval with the world; for they say that Adam, after his expulsion from Paradise, begged of God that he might erect a building like that he had seen there, called Bait-al-Mamūr, or the frequented house, and al-Dorāh towards which he might direct his prayers, and which he might compass, as the angels do the celestial one."—Sale's Introduction to the Kur'ān, page 83.

having been devotees, are also included amongst the Sarrabans. The Abdālī, Tarīn, Bābarr, Jamand, and Yūsufzo'e tribes have each one family; the Khalīls, three; and the Muhmands, four.

"The different branches of the Gharghasht division, or offspring of Gharī, are: the Surānī, Jailam, Worokzo'e or Orokzo'e, Afrīdī, Chakānī, Jankī or Jangī, Kerānī, Aormarr, Nīwat, Kākarr, Nāghir, Bābī, Mashwānī, and Tārrn tribes.

"The third son, Tabrī, is the progenitor of the Ghalzo'e, Lūdhī, Nīazī, Lohānī, Sorbanī, Sarwānī, and Klakpūr clans, the whole of whom are styled Tabrīns. It is said there was an illicit connection between one of the daughters of Tabrī and Mast Æalī, Ghorī;* and, after a short time, the fruits of this amour becoming apparent, the father, to make the best of a bad matter, gave her to him in marriage. Three sons were the offspring of this marriage—Ghalzo'e,† of whom she was pregnant before the nuptial knot was tied, Lūdī, and Sarwānī.

"The tribes above-mentioned are the whole of those who are of pure Afghān descent—the offshoots of the three sons of Æabd-ur-Rashīd, Paṭān. He was buried at Kaseghar, and succeeded by his eldest son Sarī, who was constantly at war with the Kāfirs or infidels. He had two sons—Sharkabūn and Kharshabūn. The Sarrabans are the descendants of the former, and the Yūsufzoe's, Muhmands, Khalīls, and other tribes inhabiting the plain of Peśhāwer, are the children of the latter.

"On the death of Sarī, Sharkabūn, his son, was acknowledged chief of the Afghānah. He was celebrated for his piety and wisdom. In his wars with the infidels he not only acquired great wealth, but also increased his territory, and brought many of the neighbouring tribes under his authority. During his chieftainship Kandahār and Kābul were conquered by Hūjāj bin Yūsuf, Sakafī, who was governor of Khorāsān for the Khalīfah Abd-ul-Malik bin Mirwān, who reigned from the year of the Hijrah 73 to 79 (A.D. 692–698). This event greatly increased the authority of Sharkabūn, and established his power more firmly than before.

"He is said to have been succeeded by Abdāl, his son. Some accounts mention that he was the son of Sharkabūn, and others that he was his grandson, but neither of these accounts can be correct, as there is a space of three hundred years between them; Sharkabūn being a cotemporary of Hūjāj bin Yūsuf, Sakafī, before referred to, whilst Malik Abdāl lived in the reign of Māḥmūd bin Sabuktagīn, who succeeded his father to the throne of Ghaznī in the year of the Hijrah 387 (A.D. 997). This great hiatus between the reigns of these two chieftains may be accounted for in the following manner. It often happens that the names of those chiefs who have been celebrated for their wisdom, bravery, piety, or numerous progeny, have been alone handed down to posterity, and those of mediocrity set aside and forgotten.

There is an instance of this with regard to Hāsham* and Æabd-ush-Shams, who were both sons of Æabd-ul-Manāf. The descendants of the former are still styled Ban-i-Hāsham, whilst those of the latter are known as the Ban-i-Omeyah, from Omeyah the celebrated son of Æabd-ush-Shams, and thus the father's name has been dropped altogether. In the same manner Malik Abdāl, having acquired a great name for bravery, equity, and generosity, and having surpassed many of his predecessors in grandeur and dignity, his name has been handed down to us, whilst the very remembrance of those of little or no celebrity is now altogether lost in oblivion. This is the great cause of the confusion which so often takes place in the genealogical histories of different tribes and people, and hence the reason why Malik Abdāl has been called the son or grandson of Sharkabūn.

"Malik Abdāl thus became chief of the Afghānah—Sarrabans, Gharghashts, and Tabrīns. During his reign the people began to pay attention to agriculture, and the lands about Kaseghar were brought under cultivation. Abdāl, who was famed for his bravery, followed in the path of his ancestors by making war on the people of the surrounding parts, in the plundering of whose property his followers acquired great wealth. A number of the infidels who dwelt in the vicinity of the Kaseghar district was also, at this time, converted to the Muḥammadan faith. At length the Afghāns, having no infidels to plunder, and insufficient land to yield them a subsistence, began to take service under the Ghaznīwīd Sultāns, from whom they obtained the district of Bagrām, now known as Peśhāwer, as a feudal fief.† Of the countries to the north, such as Suwāt and Bājawarr, which were in the hands of

&quot;He returned to his native land, but in the following year he again returned to Arabia with seventy of his tribe, and joined the followers of Muḥammad a short time previous to his attack on Makka, in which affair, and the subsequent operations, Kais behaved so well that the title of Æabd-ur-Rashīd was conferred on him, and he soon after returned to his home.

&quot;After the death of Muḥammad, Kais Æabd-ur-Rashīd, with a number of his people, followed the two succeeding Khalīfs in their wars; and when the Khalīf Oşmān determined on the conquest of Khorāsān, he requested Kais to obey the orders of Æabd-ullah bin Æāmir bin Kārez, who had been appointed to head the expedition. This chief had been directed to settle the Afghān tribe with their families, after the conquest of that province, between it and Hindūstān, that they might become a barrier against invasion from the latter country. Kais assisted in the conquest of Khorāsān, after which the tract of country lying between Hirāt and Kandahār was bestowed on him and his tribe, subject to the governor of the province.

At the period of the struggles between the Omeyahs and Abbāsīs, which ended in favour of the latter, the Government of Khorāsān was administered by Hūjāj bin Yūsuf, Sakafī, who sent an expedition into Hindūstān, under his nephew Kāsim bin Muḥammad bin Yūsuf, Sakafī, who was accompanied by a strong body of Afghāns. They advanced through the district of Roh,¹ and at length reached Multān, after annexing the former district, which was made over to the Afghān tribes, with directions to keep under the refractory Hindūs. From the occupation of Roh by the Afghāns they obtained the name of Rohilas.

the Kāfirs, they got possession by force of arms. They also obtained grants of land at Ghaznī and Kābul, from Sultān Māḥmūd and his successors; and by degrees began to emigrate from the neighbourhood of Kaseghar, and settled in those places they considered best suited to themselves. Up to the time of Malik Abdal, the whole of the tribes considered and obeyed him as their head and chief; but now each tribe and village began to choose their own governors, and ceased to pay that respect and obedience to his authority which they formerly did; in fact they fell headlong into the slough of arrogance and presumption.

"Abdāl was succeeded by his son, Malik Rajar. This prince—a second Nimrūd -was passionately fond of the sports of the field, in which he spent the best part of his days and nights. He was blessed with four sons-Æsau, Nūr, Khokār, and Mākou, the first of whom, a God-fearing and just personage, succeeded him in the chieftainship: the others gave name respectively to the Nūrzo'e, Khokārī, and Mākou tribes.

"The remainder of the Abdālīs, and other clans, which had up to the present period continued to dwell in the Kaseghar district, near the Takht-i-Sūlīmān, finding it too small to support so many families, began, in the hot season, to migrate with their flocks to the neighbourhood of Kandahar, returning again to their old haunts at Kaseghar in the winter.

"Malik Æsau had three sons—Zīrak, Is'hāk, and Æalī. At his death he bequeathed the turban of authority to Zīrak, his sword to Is'hāk, and his carpet for prayer to Æalī. From these two latter the Is'hākzo'e and Æalīzo'e branch of the Abdālīs are descended; and from them is also descended the only one of the twelve āstānahs, or families, who are devoted to the priesthood, as already referred to.

"Zīrak, who was a wise and able chief, governed his tribe with energy and ability. He completely rooted out the crimes of impiety, adultery, and dishonesty, which appear to have been but too prevalent at the period in question.

"The five tribes which have been already mentioned as the Abdalī clan, viz., Is'hākzo'e, Æalīzo'e, Nūrzo'e, Khwagānī, and Mākou, are known as the Panjpā'o branch.

"My own opinion is, that Malik Abdal was a cotemporary of Sultan Mahmud, Ghaznīwīd, and Malik Zīrak of Shah Rukh Mīrzā, son of Amīr Tīmūr, Gūrgānī,*

"In gratitude for this effectual aid on the part of the Afghanah, Māḥmūd gave his sister in marriage to Sa'ho, the chief opposed him in the succession, and a civil war ensued between them. The Afghans, who were dependent in some measure on this chief, joined his son-in-law Māḥmūd, who defeated Ismāæīl, and confined him in a fortress.

between whose reigns there is a period of some three centuries. As has been already noticed, the names of the most celebrated chieftains can alone have been preserved by their countrymen, whilst those of less fame have sunk into oblivion.

"The district of Rūdah and Kaseghar, as before stated, not being of sufficient extent to support the great number of people to which the Afghāns had by this time increased, Malik Zīrak was induced to send an agent to Shāh Rukh Mīrzā, at Hirāt, for the purpose of soliciting a grant of the districts round Kandahār. This request was favourably listened to by the Shāh, and Zīrak, in consequence, gave directions to the Abdālī, Barech, Tarīn, Jamand, Ghalzo'e, Kākarr, Kāsī, Bābarr, and other tribes—who were more numerous than the extent of their lands could support—to proceed to Kandahār, and settle on the lands granted by the Shāh in that district. To each tribe a portion of land was given, in proportion to the number of families of which it consisted, and for which they had to pay a small tax to the Governor of the province.

"Zīrak had three sons—Popul, Bārak, and Alako, from whom have sprung the Populzo'es, Bārakzo'es, and Alakozo'es. At his death Popul succeeded him in the chieftainship of the whole Afghān people. Being a sagacious and intelligent chief, and endowed with the tact of government, he kept the whole of the tribes under subjection and obedience. They also were generally well satisfied with his government; but, at the same time, those who showed any opposition to his authority were punished by the Kandahār Governors, and this tended still more to keep all under proper restraint.

"Popul had also three sons—Ḥabīb, Bādū, and Aiyūb. The two former were by one mother, and the latter by another wife. Some also say that Aiyūb was the son of the first wife by a former husband. Bādū was the ancestor of the Bādūzo'es, and Aiyūb of the Aiyūbzo'es.

"At length Popul, suddenly finding his end approaching, sent for his children; and, after giving them much good advice, and exhorting them to follow in the footsteps of their ancestors, departed this life, leaving the chieftainship of the tribes in the hands of his eldest son Ḥabīb.

"The children of Afghānah, who had now become a numerous people, and had, up to this time, generally paid obedience to the authority of their chiefs, began to show symptoms of restlessness and dislike to the yoke of Ḥabīb's supremacy. At length they commenced quarrelling amongst themselves, and the khels or clans of every village, having declared themselves independent, set about nominating their own chiefs. All was uproar and confusion; the rich tyrannized over the poor, and the strong plundered the property of the weak; might was right; and villany, impiety, and depravity, reigned supreme.

"Malik Ḥabīb endeavoured for a long time to stem this torrent of rebellion, and regain his lost authority over the people, but without success; and at length not one tribe remained on his side. The Tarīns, Barechis, Chalzo'es, Kākarrs, Shīranīs, and others, each set up one of their own tribe as pretenders to the chieftainship, raised the standard of revolt, and commenced a civil war. The life of Habīb was spent in civil contentions, which were entirely without avail. He had three sons—Bāmī, Ismāæīl, and Ḥasan, from whom are descended the clans of Bāmīzo'e, Ismāæīlzo'e, and Ḥasanzo'e.

"Bāmī, who was of a mild disposition, and possessed of many excellent qualities, succeeded his father as nominal head of the Afghāns. Sultān Bahlol, Lūdī, and his son Sikandar, emperors of Hindūstān, were on friendly terms with him, and sent him from time to time various costly presents. This produced great envy in the hearts of the pretenders to the chieftainship, and they despatched agents with presents to those potentates. Their agents, without being admitted to an audience even, were dismissed with the answer that the Sultāns neither knew of, nor recognized, any other head of the Afghāns than Malik Bāmī. He had four sons—Sāliḥ, Æalī, Zaiyl, and Warūkah. They were fathers of large families, and their memory has been perpetuated in the separate clans bearing their respective names.

"Bāmī died at an advanced age, and the shadow of chieftainship which now alone remained descended to his eldest son Sālih, who became head of the Habībzo'e tribe, which consisted of the three smaller ones of Æalī, Zaiyl, and Warūkah, just mentioned, who acknowledged and supported his authority. He was a man of great piety and generosity; and his threshold was never clear from the crowds of poor, nor his table from the numerous guests. In his lifetime Shīr Shāh and Salīm Shāh, who were of the Shorkhel branch of the Afghans, sat on the throne of Delhi; and the friendship which had sprung up between his father and the Lūdīah Emperors was renewed and kept up with the former princes also. At length the vicissitudes of fortune wrested the sovereignty from the grasp of the Lūdīahs, and placed it in the hand of the Moghal; but when Shīr Shāh, in the year 951 of the Hijrah (A.D. 1544), sallied forth to regain the throne of his ancestors, the Afghans assisted him with a powerful force of their countrymen, and Hindustan was regained. When the agents of Malik Sālih presented his letter of congratulation to Shīr Shāh, the Emperor observed to his ministers and court, that Malik Sālih was not only his own chieftain, but that his forefathers, from the time of Malik Afghan, were the chiefs of his forefathers also; and that the family of Malik Sālih had no equal in rank amongst the whole of the Afghan tribes. Shan, after thus acknowledging Sālih as his head and chief, and treating his agents with great distinction, dismissed them with numerous presents for their master.

"At length, in the reign of Shāh Tahmāsīb, Sufawī, in the year of the Hijrah 965, on the night of Monday, the 17th of the month Zū'lhījjah, the bright orb of Saddo rose from the eastern horizon of the black goat's hair tent of Malik Sāliḥ, and diffused his refulgent beams on the surrounding world."

With the birth of Saddo, the ancestor of the great Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī, the Introduction to the "Tazkīrāt-ul-Mulūk" closes.

Sir John Malcolm's words on the origin of the Afghāns are—"Although the right of the Afghāns to this proud descent is very doubtful, it is evident, from their personal appearance, and many of their usages, that they are a distinct race from the Persians, Tartars, and Indians, and this alone seems to give credibility to a statement which is contradicted by so many strong facts, and of which no direct proof has been produced."

Sir William Jones was of opinion that the Afghāns are the Paropamisadæ* of the ancients; but this is very improbable, for it is proved by the statements of many authorities, besides that of the work from which I have given an extract, and many other histories of undoubted authenticity, that the Afghāns are not the aborigines of the country they at present inhabit, but have gradually advanced from the west of Asia; and it is not improbable but that, during the lapse of ages, they might have been forced, from various causes, to emigrate from the districts in the vicinity of Jerusalem, as stated in the tradition I have quoted. The Seāh-pośh Kāfirs are in all probability the Paropamisadæ of the writers of antiquity, respecting whom, on some future occasion, I hope to offer some remarks.†

According to the "Makhzan Afghānī," after Ferīdūn's victory over Zoḥāk, the latter was subjected to such acts of tyranny that his children fled for safety to the mountain tract of Ghor, which at that time was only inhabited by a few scattered tribes of the Israelites, Afghāns, and others. If Jewish families could, at that period, have been inhabitants of Ghor, it is equally possible that the Afghāns themselves might have come originally from the Holy Land.‡

The mountain districts of Afghānistān heard not the "Allāhu-Akbar" of the conquering Arabs until the fourth or fifth century of the Hijrah, by which time the sun of their power had commenced to wane. Up to this time even, we find that the Kāfirs or infidels inhabited the mountain districts of Ghor, and continued to dwell there up to the thirteenth century of our era, when Marco Polo visited those regions.

The Yūsufzo'e tribes, who now hold the whole of the districts to the north of the Landdaey Sind, or eastern half of the Kābul river, || were, even in the time of

He advised them to quit the place before its ruin came on, and to depart as soon as they had buried him and his wife. The Jews, being at this time captives, would—if they had followed the advice of Tobit—have had, in the first place, to escape from Nineveh by stealth; and, having accomplished this much, where could they hope to find a more secure retreat than towards the east, and in the direction of the mountainous tracts now inhabited by the Afghān tribes? Bāber, but new comers; and in this, his statement agrees with the account in the "Tazkirāt-ul-Mulūk." In another place Bāber mentions the people of Bājawarr as "rebels to the followers of Islām; and, besides their rebellion and hostility, they followed the customs and usages of infidels, while even the name of Islām was extirpated from among them."* From this it appears that the people of the country had been converted to Muhammadanism, and relapsed again to idolatry, but were not Afghāns.†

Nowāb Allah Yār Khān, son of the Nowāb Ḥāfiz Raḥmat Khān,‡ in the preface to a lexicographical work of which he is the author, states that "there are two divisions of the Afghāns, whose language also differs in many respects, so that the words used by some tribes are not known to, or understood by, others. They are termed Puśhtūn and Pukhtūn, and they speak the Puśhto and Pukhto respectively.§ The former is the western dialect, having some affinity to the Persian; and the latter the eastern, containing many Sanskrit and Hindī words. The people who dwell about Kābul and Ķandahār, Shorā'wak and Piṣhīn, are designated Bar Puśhtūn, or Upper Afghāns, from pabove; and those occupying the district of Roh, which is near Hind (India), are called Lar Pukhtūn, or Lower Afghāns, from below.

He describes Roh—about which there has been great diversity of opinion—as "bounded on the east by Suwāt and Kashmīr, west by the Helmund river, north by Kāshkār or Chitrāl and Kāfiristān, and south by the river or sea of Bukker, called in Persian Nīlāb (the Blue Water), and Nīl'āow or Aba-Sīn (the Father of Rivers) by the Afghāns."

The author of the "Ferang-i-Jehāngīrī" gives a somewhat similar account of it. "Roh," he says, "is the name of a range of lofty mountains, in length extending from Suwāt and Bājawarr to Sīwnī, or Sīwa'ī, which is in the district of Bukker, in Sind; and in breadth from Ḥasan Abdāl (in the Sind Sāgur Doāba, of the Panjāb) to Kandahār: and in this highland range the latter city is situated."

I have been told by Afghāns in the vicinity of Peśhāwer, and other places, that their ancestors first came from a district named Ghwārī Marghāb, which they said lies to the westward of Khorāsān. This is, however, a mistake; a small village, bearing that name, and the place referred to by them, is situated about mid-way between Kandahār, Shorā'wak, and Girishk, which is one of the old seats of the Afghān tribes who now occupy the Peśhāwer valley. Ghor, supposed to have been the original district of the Afghānah, lies much to the north. It was from this latter place that the Ghoriān tribe issued in the year 1152 A.D., when they overturned the throne of the Ghaznīwīd Sultāns.

The diversity of opinion regarding the origin of the Afghānah, is not greater than that respecting their language, of which, at the time I write, with the exception of a small brochure by the late Major R. Leech of the Bombay Army, no grammar exists.* It is to be hoped that the present work, together with the Dictionary which is published consentaneously with it, will enable the learned both of Europe and India, to give a better, and more decided opinion than heretofore on the affinity of the Afghān language to the languages of ancient Asia.†

Sir William Jones's opinion was, that the Pushto or Pukhto language has a manifest resemblance to the Chaldaic, but Professor Klaproth vehemently denies this, and states, that nothing whatever is known regarding this dialect;‡ that neither in words nor grammatical structure is there the slightest resemblance between Pushto and any Semitic language, and that it is unquestionably a branch of the great Indū-Germanic division of languages.

I cannot refrain from remarking here, that it appears most astonishing that persons, who cannot possibly have had any opportunity of becoming practically acquainted with a language, or even with the correct pronunciation of its alphabet, can venture opinions, often very decided, as to its origin and similarity with other tongues, with which they may even be less acquainted, or of which they may have only a slight theoretical idea, derived at second-hand from translations alone; for surely no one would venture to give an opinion of a language from original MSS. which no one within a thousand miles can decipher!

"A little knowledge is a dangerous thing, Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring."

Professor Dorn of St. Petersburgh—who some few years since published a work on the Pushto language §—in the preface to his translation of "Neamet Ullah," gives as his opinion, that the Pushto language bears not the slightest resemblance to the Hebrew or Chaldaic, either in its grammar or vocabulary; || and he imagines the Afghāns may belong to the great Indū-Teutonic family of nations, and are aborigines of the country they at present inhabit. This latter opinion, however, is proved to be an erroneous one, from the writings of various authors, and many well authenticated facts.

The Baptist Missionaries of Serampūr consider that the Pushto and the

If we are to take the Glossary of Prof. Dorn as a specimen of the vocabulary of the Pushto, I should say the language bears more than a strong resemblance to Hebrew, Chaldaic, and other Semitic dialects, seeing that this Glossary contains ninety per cent. of pure Arabic words. See pages 388, 389, and 390, in which there is not one Pushto word; with two or three exceptions, they are all pure Arabic.

Belūch* languages form the connecting link between those of Sanskrit and those of Hebrew origin; † but, if we are to take their so-called translation of the New Testament (see subsequent note) as a specimen of their knowledge of Pushto, they are not authorities in the matter.

M. Adelung, in his "Mithridates." vol. i. page 225, considers Pushto an original and peculiar dialect, but at the same time acknowledges his acquaintance with it to be very slight.

Mr. Elphinstone, in his work on Kābul, vol. i. page 302, with reference to the Afghān language, considers that its origin cannot be easily discovered. He remarks, "a large portion of the words that compose it, as also most of the verbs and particles, belong to an unknown root, and in this portion are included most of those words which, from the early necessity for designating the objects they represent, must have formed parts of the original language; yet some of this very class belong to the Zend and Pehlavī, such as the terms for father and mother, sister and brother." He also further states, that out of two hundred and eighteen Pushto words, not one had the smallest appearance of being deducible from any of the Semitic languages; but that a resemblance (five out of one hundred and ten words) can be traced between it and the Kūrdish, considered to be an Indū-Germanie tongue.;

One of the most decided proofs against the erroneous idea that the Afghāns are the aborigines of the territory they at present inhabit, and that the Pushto is the original dialect of those countries, consist in the facts brought to light in the deciphering of the Bactrian and Indū-Seythian coins. M. Lassen, in his interesting and crudite works on this subject, very truly observes; "I indeed know that some have pretended to recognize the Afghāns in Eastern Kābul, even as early as Alexander's time; not so Mr. Elphinstone, who rather proves their immigration into Kābul at a much later period. This conjecture has originated with Professor Wilken, who thinks he recognizes the Afghāns in the Assakanes. If these were indeed Afghāns, the Afghān language would have been spoken throughout Kābul, and the language of the coins must be the source of the Pushto. Without observing that neither ancient authorities nor modern Afghān history** admit or require this supposition, the correct assertion of the learned

† They also notice the numerous pure Hebrew roots to be found in Pushto, which is not astonishing, considering that those roots are alike cognate to the Arabic and other dialects of the Semitic, which, being the sacred language of Islām, has entered largely into every Muhammadan tongue, and for which words there is generally no equivalent in them.

‡ This probably refers to the vocabulary contained in the work in question, in which about one quarter of the words, or more, may be identified with Arabic and its cognates, and many others with Persian and Sanskrit.

<sup>**</sup> Bāber does not mention anything about Afghāns at Kābul, when he took that eity in the month of October, 1504; but he notices the tribe of Tarkolārmī Afghāns in Lamghān, a district on the northern bank of the Kābul river, and immediately west of Jelālābād. The Tarkolārmī tribe now occupy the country of Bājawm, much further to the west.

Academician himself, that the Afghans belonged to the Medo-Persic tribe, is at variance with it: the Assakanes inhabited a country, where even, in the 7th century, A.D., an Indian language was spoken."

As the learned Professor urges—if the Afghans were the aborigines of the countries they at present inhabit, the Afghan language must, as a matter of course, have been generally spoken. Had such been the case, the language on the coins must have been the source of the Pushto; but no similarity whatever exists between them.

The Afghans, although subdivided into numerous tribes, are undoubtedly one race, and speak one original language. Had they been the aborigines of the country at present known as Afghānistān, we must have heard something of them from ancient writers, for we find that, even in the time of Herodotus, Darius had sent an exploring expedition under Scylax of Caryanda and others as far as the Indus.* That the whole of the regions west of Jelālābād, or even as far west as Kābul, were peopled by a Hindū race, most ancient writers agree to, as also that they were of different tribes and spoke different languages. Herodotus says: "There are many nations of Indians, and they do not speak the same language as each other; some of them are Nomades, and others not."+

Again the father of history observes: "There are other Indians bordering on the city of Caspatyrus and the country of Pactyica, settled northwards of the other Indians, whose mode of life resembles that of the Bactrians."‡ The country here referred to-the same as Scylax and his companions started from on their voyage down the river—is the present district of Paklī, north of Attak. The Indians here mentioned are, in all probability, the ancestors of the race who still occupy that district,—the Suwātīs, and the people of Astor and Gilgitt.

It is therefore evident that the Afghans have immigrated into their present territories from the westward; § and that the aborigines—the Seāh-posh Kāfirs, § The empire of the Great Cyrus extended, according to the best authorities, from the Ægean to the Indus, and from the Euxine and Caspian to Ethiopia and the Arabian sea. As it was customary to transport a whole tribe, and sometimes even a whole nation, from one country to another, and as the Jews were ever a stiff-necked race, is it not possible that the Great King may have transported some of the most troublesome amongst them to the thinly-peopled provinces of the east, where they would be too far away from their native land and captive countrymen to give trouble in future? Or, as I have remarked in another place, is it not probable, as well as possible, that those of the Jews who could effect their escape might have fled eastward, preferring a wandering life in a mountainous country, with independence, to the grinding tyranny of Cyrus's successors and their Satraps? In fact, there was no other direction to which they could have fled, except towards the north, inhabited by the Seythians, who would have massacred, or at least made slaves of them, or have sold them as such; or eastward, which, being mountainous and but thinly peopled, was likely to afford them a permanent and secure retreat. According to Niematu-I-lah, Zohāk's children, to escape the exterminating vengeance of Ferīdun, fled for refuge to the Kohistan of Chor, and settled there; and, at his time, its only inhabitants were some scattered tribes of the Israelites, Afghans, and others.

or Black-clad Pagans; the Suwātīs; and the people inhabiting the hills to the north-east of Suwāt, on the one side, and possibly the Belūchīs and Jatts, on the other—have been forced, by the gradual advance of this powerful race, to move to the north-east and south-west respectively.

I formerly entertained an idea that some affinity might exist between Pushto and the language of that strange people, the Gypsies, but subsequent inquiries have convinced me to the contrary, and I find that no trace of similarity exists between them.

Whether the Afghān language be a dialect of the Semitie, of Zend, or Pehlavī origin, or of the Indian stock, I will leave for others better qualified to decide. Before entering into any investigation on the subject, it must be borne in mind that "no efforts of the learned can ever so far alter a language, as to deface every line of resemblance between the speech of the present day and that of even the remotest ancestry: nothing but the absolute extirpation of the aboriginal natives can apparently accomplish so singular a revolution."* As an instance of this, we have merely to examine the present language of Persia, and the different dialects of the continent of India; or for a still more convincing proof, to look into the Gothic and Celtic original of the modern European languages, amidst the polish and refinement of the Greek and Latin.

Before bringing these rambling remarks to a close, I must notice a few of the most striking peculiarities of the Pushto language, which will, in some measure, serve as a guide in investigations as to its origin and affinity to the other dialects of the Asiatic continent. It will, however, be well, first to point out the best and most effectual method of ascertaining the real affinity of Oriental languages.

Baron William Humboldt, in an essay on this highly important subject, remarks: "I confess that I am extremely averse to the system which proceeds on the supposition that we can judge of the affinity of languages merely by a certain number of ideas expressed in the different languages which we wish to eompare. I beg you will not suppose, however, that I am insensible to the value and utility of the comparisons; on the contrary, when they are well executed, I appreciate all their importance; but I can never deem them sufficient to answer the end for which they have been undertaken. They certainly form part of the data to be taken into account in deciding on the affinity of a siege of twenty months. It is therefore probable that the Jews, of whom a considerable number remained at Babylon, went out of the city before the siege was formed, as the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah had exhorted them long before, and Zachariah very lately in the following terms: "Thou daughter of Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon, flee from the country and save thyself."—Isaiah, chap. xlviii., verse 20; Jeremiah, chap. l., verse 8, chap. li., verses 6, 9-45; Zachariah, chap. ii.

It also appears that Ochus, son of Artaxerxes Mnëmon, carried a number of Jewish captives into Egypt, and many others into Hyrcania, where he settled them on the coast of the Caspian (A. M. 3653, Ant. J. C. 351); might not some have been sent eastward also ?—See "Solin. C." 35, "Euseb. in Chron." etc.

languages; but we should never be guided by them alone, if we wish to arrive at a solid, complete, and certain conclusion. If we would make ourselves acquainted with the relation between two languages, we ought to possess a thorough and profound knowledge of each of them. This is the principle dictated alike by common sense and by that precision acquired by the habit of scientific research.

"I do not mean to say that, if we are unable to attain a profound knowledge of each idiom, we should on this account entirely suspend our judgment: I only insist on it that we should not prescribe to ourselves arbitrary limits, and imagine that we are forming our judgment on a firm basis, while in reality it is insufficient.

"But further, I am convinced that it is only by an accurate examination of the grammar of languages, that we can pronounce a decisive judgment on their true affinities.

"If two languages, such, for instance, as the Sanskrit and the Greek, exhibit grammatical forms which are identical in arrangement, and have a close analogy in their sounds, we have an incontestible proof that these two languages belong to the same family.

"The difference between the real affinity of languages, which presumes affiliation, as it were, among the nations who speak them, and that degree of relation which is purely historical, and only indicates temporary and accidental connections among nations, is, in my opinion, of the greatest importance. Now it appears to me impossible ever to ascertain that difference merely by the examination of words, especially if we examine but a small number of them.

"But whatever opinion may be entertained with respect to this manner of considering the difference of languages, it appears to me at all events demonstrated: First, that all research into the affinity of languages, which does not enter quite as much into the examination of the grammatical system as into that of words, is faulty and imperfect; and, secondly, that the proofs of the real affinity of languages, that is to say, the question whether two languages belong to the same family, ought to be principally deduced from that alone; since the identity of words only proves a resemblance such as may be purely historical and accidental."

There are nine letters of the Arabic alphabet which never occur in pure Afghān words,—;, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , and ; and therefore the language really contains but twenty-nine letters, including five peculiar ones, to which, after a careful comparison of six hundred alphabets, I find that there is no similarity as to form or sound, either in Arabic, Zend, or Sanskrit; but characters similar in sound are contained in most of the Semitic, and some Tārtārīan dialects. The Pushto letters with the corresponding ones in the languages referred to are as follow:—

† ts or tz, pronounced tse or tze, has an equivalent in the Chaldaic ts, Hebrew tse tse

†  $\frac{dz}{dz}$  or  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , pronounced  $\frac{dze}{dze}$  or  $\frac{dse}{ds}$ , similar to the Hebrew †  $\frac{dsain}{ds}$ , Aramāic |  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Palmyren I  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Phænician  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Kufic  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Syriac 11  $\frac{dzain}{ds}$ , the Assyrian cuneiform  $\frac{ds}{ds}$  |  $\frac{ds}{ds}$  or  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Armenian  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Greek  $\frac{ds}{ds}$  and Japanese  $\frac{ds}{ds}$  |  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ , Mongolish  $\frac{ds}{ds}$  |  $\frac{ds}{ds}$ of the Armenian, there is no equivalent in any of the known dialects of the old world. Some persons, and among them Major Leech, have considered the Sanskrit lingual sas similar in sound; but it is merely necessary to hear it pronounced by an Afghān mountaineer to convince any one of the total difference; indeed it is almost impossible to give a proper idea of its sound in writing.

بن  $\underline{kh\bar{\imath}}$ n or  $\underline{\dot{s}hey}$ , bears some similarity to the  $\Rightarrow k'ch$  of the Chaldaic, and with this exception, no sound like it is to be found amongst the letters of the six hundred alphabets before referred to.+

or urrūn or rrūn, is a combination of the sound of urray and onun, the latter nasal. It is quite impossible to acquire the real pronunciation, except from an Afghān mouth when using such a word as باندی būrrnah, the eye-lash, or باندی kūrrnaey, stone. The or rūn of the Sindhīan language is like it in sound.

Pushto also, like the Semitic dialects, of which family I am inclined to consider it, has the t'h with a strong aspiration, to which sound the Persians have an unconquerable antipathy; indeed, their mouths seem to be so formed as to be unable to utter it. Like the Jews and Egyptians, as well as the Arabs, the Afghāns uniformly give the hard sounds, t'h, d'h, ds, dtz, dz, etc., to those characters which the Persians have ever softened to z and s. The pronunciation too, is somewhat difficult on account of the use of several gutturals, and the combinations of such letters as in the combination of s

In harshness of pronunciation, and in the declensions of its nouns, it bears resemblance to the Zend and Pehlavī; and, like the former language, can be, and often is, written in old works, on which alone we can place dependence, by distinct letters in the body of each word, instead of introducing the short vowels. Of the affinity of the Zend and Sanskrit, at present there is no doubt; but the

Pehlavī appears to have a greater affinity to the Arabic, and to differ little from the present language of Persia.*

In Arabic and Persian it is impossible to sound a consonant which may be the first letter of a word, without the aid of a vowel, whilst in Pushto there are numbers of words beginning with a consonant immediately followed by another; as, شبههٔ shpah, 'night;' بنكته shpah, 'night;' بنكته shpah, 'night;' بنكته shpah, 'night;' بنكته ghlā, 'theft;' بنكته khkatah, 'below.'

The vowels and consonants used in Pushto have the same powers as those of the Arabic, Hebrew, and other Semitic dialects. Like them, it has but two genders,—the masculine and feminine; but the former have a dual form, which is wanting in Pushto. In this respect the Afghan also differs distinctly from the Zend and the Sanskrit, both of which have a neuter gender, but agrees with the Pehlavi, from which the modern Persian is derived. In common with the Hebrew, Arabic, and Persian, it has the peculiar separable and inseparable pronouns, the latter being invariably attached to some preceding word, whether a noun, verb, or particle. When attached to nouns they signify possession or propriety; with intrausitive verbs in the course of conjugation, they are used in the place of personal pronouns; and, with transitives, point out the This is also a peculiar feature of the Sindhīan language, objective case. † which has several letters in common with Pushto, besides its own peculiar The inflections of the Afghan verbs too, are formed according to the Arabic and Hebrew system, from two original tenses only—the māzī or past, and the muzūriæ or agrist, the past participle being used in the construction of the compound tenses, with the aid of the auxiliary, to be. Another peculiarity is, that the intransitive verbs agree in gender with the nominative, whilst the transitives are governed, both in gender and number, by the objective case. In many respects the Pushto syntax agrees with that of the Hebrew; and I have no doubt but that much greater affinity will be found to exist between them, if compared by any one well versed in the latter language.

The Pushto language is spoken with slight variation in orthography and pronunciation, from the valley of Pishīn, south of Ķandahār, to Kāfiristān, on the north; and from the banks of the Helmand, on the west, to the Attak, Sindhu, or Indus, on the east—throughout the Sama or plain of the Yūsufzo'es; the mountainous districts of Bājawr, Pānjkora‡ Suwāt, and Buner, to Astor, on the borders of Little Thibet—an immense tract of country, equal in extent to the entire Spanish peninsula.

has been subjected for the last seventy or eighty years, have necessarily affected their language also; hence the great variation observable in the orthography and mode of writing of modern Pushto works. On this account, no dependence whatever can be placed on any manuscript of later date than the reign of the founder of the Durānī empire,—Aḥmād Shāh, Abdālī (one of their poetical authors), or, at furthest, of his son, Tīmūr Shāh; for it is almost impossible to find two copies of an author, unless written by one person, agreeing on these essential points. I have in my possession a rare prose work, which was written in the reign of the Emperor Aurangzeb, which I picked up in a most out-of-way place—a pawn shop at Bombay. The mode of writing and orthography in it, I have generally adopted, together with that of the Makhzan Afghānī, one of the earliest works we know of, throughout the following pages.

The assistance which I have derived from a knowledge of the dialects of the neighbouring territories, to six of which I have devoted many years, has been very great, indeed more than I can well express. It has enabled me to trace words of Arabic, Persian, Tūrkī, Sanskrit, and Hindī origin, greatly garbled in orthography, and vitiated in pronunciation, which a person unacquainted with them in any way would, in all probability, set down as pure Pushto.

As an example of this, I will mention one instance alone. M. Klaproth, in his apparent eagerness for classing the Belūch language, which is a mixture of Persian, Sindhī, Panjābī, Hindī, and Sanskrit, amongst the Indū-Germanic family of tongues, commits an error, from, I faney, ignorance of the Persian language. He gives the following table:—*

BELÜCH.	GERMAN.	LATIN.	GREEK.	ENGLISH.
Shash Hapt	Sechs	Sex Septem	Hepta	Six Seven

Now the Persian for six is  $\frac{shash}{shash}$ , and seven is  $\frac{shash}{shash}$ , which two words, to all appearance, have a greater affinity to the Belūch words here mentioned, than to either German, Latin, Greek, or English; in fact, they are precisely the same words, for  $\frac{shash}{shash}$  (f) is used for and pronounced  $\frac{shash}{shash}$  (p) indiscriminately, and would be written exactly the same in both languages. If we consider that Belūchistān is merely separated from the Persian province of Kirmān by a range of mountains, the similarity is naturally accounted for, without leaving Asia for that purpose, as the learned Professor appears to have done,—"Ea sub oculis posita negligimus: proximorum incuriosi, longinqua sectamur."

I think it will be generally allowed that, at the present time, a knowledge of the language of Afghānistān is a desideratum, holding as we do the Derājāt,

Banū Tāk, Kohātt, Peśhāwer, and the Samah, or Plain of the Yūsufzo'es, throughout which districts, with the exception of Derā Ghāzī Khān, nine-tenths of the people speak no other dialect. By being acquainted with this language, an officer can communicate personally with the people of the country, and give ear to their complaints, without the aid of moonshees and others as interpreters. In respect to police officers, they can thereby communicate their secret orders direct, without fear of betrayal by a third party. Much discontent and heart-burning is enkindled in the minds of the Afghāns, who are by nature a proud, fiery, and independent race, from having to come into contact with natives of Hindūstān, whom they hold in supreme contempt; and their former triumphs over whom, at Pānīput and other places, they do not appear to have forgotten.

We have also in Sindh and the Panjāb seven local infantry corps,* which contain at least a proportion of one half Afghāns or Rohilas, whose native tongue is Puśhto, and many of whom understand Hindūstānī but imperfectly from the lips of a qualified interpreter. A translation of the Articles of War can be easily made, of which a specimen will be found in the appendix to this Grammar. At Courts Martial a colloquial knowledge is indispensable; and all officers in those corps, as well as others holding appointments, of whatever description, beyond the Indus, should be expected to qualify themselves in the Puśhto language. The plea hitherto has been the want of books, but I trust that my humble efforts during the last nine years will have removed that excuse.

The Russians appear to have paid considerable attention to, and to have made some progress in, the study of Pushto, if we may judge from the work (although containing very numerous errors) published some time since by Professor Dorn, of St. Petersburg, who was the first to produce a work in the language.

The age of Dost Muhammad Khān is now so great, that in all probability a year or two more must terminate the earthly career of that extraordinary man. His death will be the signal for the commencement of civil dissensions, and doubtless many astonishing changes will take place in Afghānistān. Opportunities may offer themselves for the renewal of friendly intercourse between the two nations, which should not be allowed to pass; and trade and commerce should be encouraged by all and every legitimate means. This effected, there is not much fear of the Russians establishing themselves in Afghānistān; although, should they even succeed in debouching from the Khaiber Pass on the plain of Jamrūd, there is not much doubt but that they will merely add other heaps to the bones which have already whitened on that scene of numerous conflicts.

The object of Russia, however, does not appear to be Afghanistan alone: † for twelve years back we have heard of their having established a line of Cossack posts, provided with guns, and all the munitions of war, on nine of the twelve hundred versts of desert, which separates the city of Omsk, the capital of Western Siberia, from the Thibetan frontier.

† "One of the principal objects he (Prince Gortschakoff, Governor-General of Siberia,) had in view, was the organization of a Russian settlement through the Kirghis Steppes, in the direct line to Thibet. The distance, as the crow flies, from Omsk

* This force has been very largely increased within the last two years, and now amounts to some thirty regiments, or even more, many of which, consisting entirely of Afghāns, behaved nobly before Dehlí and other places during the late rebellion.

Peśhāwer, some fifty or sixty years since, was one of the principal seats of Muḥammadan learning, and by many was considered a more learned city than even Bokhārā itself.

The custom is for boys and girls of from five to twelve years of age to go to the same school. After learning the letters, they immediately commence reading the Kurān in Arabic, but of course without understanding it. On its completion they begin to read some Pushto work, usually a commentary on the Kurān, or an explanation of the rites and ceremonies of their faith, such as may be found in the simple little work entitled Rashīd-ul-By'ān, or some such religious subject. After the twelfth year, the girls either attend a dame's school, or, if their parents can afford it, are taught at home. Sometimes boys under twelve years of age, go to a dame's school with grown up girls of fifteen and upwards; but this custom is only prevalent at a distance from towns, as in most large places there are separate schools for males and females. The scholars either pay a small sum monthly to their teacher, or make him a present after having completed the perusal of the Kurān, according to the position and means of their parents. Amongst some tribes a portion of land is allotted to the Mullā or Priest, who also acts as village schoolmaster.

to the frontier of Thibet, is twelve hundred versts: through a part of this desert the natives are on friendly terms with the Russians. So soon, therefore, as a permanent settlement is established through the whole distance, immense advantages will be gained to Russian commerce. At this moment this object is accomplished in nine hundred versts, or three quarters of the way. A line of Cossaeks is permanently formed, provided with guns, ammunition, and all the necessaries for a fixed residence, which may be liable to hostile incursions from time to time. The Kirghis, however, stand in such awe of the Cossaeks, and the benefits they derive from trading with Russia are so great, that the caravans now go as securely the whole nine hundred versts, as in any part of the empire. Every summer sees some fresh point gained; and there is no doubt, that in a few years, the Russian dominion will only end where that of Thibet begins. They were for some time stopped by a district more desert and inhospitable than the rest, which was supposed to reach to the Thibetan frontier; but it has been discovered by a Cossaek, who was three years prisoner in the country, that it only extends about ninety versts, and he described the other side of it as being fertile, well watered, and altogether different from the other Steppes. There will, therefore, probably be no further obstacle to their progress, and a glance at the map will show that they are much nearer to our Indian frontier here, than by any other road they can take.

"Once established as far as the boundary of Thibet, the Russians will have no great difficulty in obtaining a footing in it, and a transit for their merchandize to India would be a matter of course.

"There is at Omsk a military school where five hundred boys are educated, who are to become soldiers, most of them being soldiers' children, some few Kirghis, and the sons of exiles. The establishment is admirably conducted: we went over it several times, and nothing could exceed the regularity and order which prevailed. There is another military school for Cossacks only, and the boys are destined for a different career in some respects from the others. We may safely defy any country in the world to produce an establishment in any way superior to this; our only doubt is, if it is not too good for those who are brought up in it, considering what their future destination is likely to be. The boys are taught drawing, algebra, languages, history, and fortification; the first class, who were all under seventeen years of age, studied principally the Oriental languages, and are intended for interpreters and agents in the East. We were told by General Schramm, who has the superintendence of the school, that most of those who composed the first class understood Mongolish, Arabie, and Persian, and have also native youths to teach them the patois of the nomadic tribes.

"We cannot, however, wonder, when these pains are taken in the wilds of Siberia to educate boys for the services they are to perform as men, that Russian diplomatic agents should be so superior to our own; and the habit of thinking such a preparation must have created, cannot fail to give them great advantages as negotiators and general agents."—Recollections of Siberia in the Years 1840 and 1841, by C. H. Cottrell, Esq. London: J. W. Parker.

Unlike most eastern nations, the Afghāns appear to regard women in a great measure on an equality with themselves, in this world at least; and the latter generally receive some sort of education.

Many of the Afghān females are famous for their knowledge of Pushto, which they both read and write; indeed most of the works on religious subjects, and the rites and ceremonies of the Muḥammadan faith, appear to be perused by them more than by the men. The daughter of the late Dalīl Khān, Arbāb, or chief of Torū,* is justly celebrated for her learning, and general proficiency in the Afghān language. Another young person dwelling in the Yūsuf-zī district, supports herself, and also assists her family, by copying Pushto books. She writes a nice hand, and copies very correctly: the MS. copy from which my Text Book is printed is chiefly from her pen. The custom with all copyists is, to write their names, and the date on which they complete a work, on the last page; but it being considered a breach of delicacy for a female to sign her own name, she inserts that of her father instead.

The young woman to whom I now refer is unmarried, and declares her intention of leading a single life, and devoting herself to literature. Considering the abject state in which the Muḥammadan women are kept, I think this a very favourable feature in the Afghān character.

The Afghān language, taking all things into consideration, is very rich in literature. There have been numerous poets, of whom Æabd-ur-Raḥmān, who flourished in the reign of the Moghal Emperor, Aurangzeb, is, perhaps, the best known, and, consequently, most generally esteemed. He was a Mullā or Priest; and his writings, which are of a religious and moral character, are collected in the form of a  $D\bar{1}w\bar{a}n$ ,—a Persian term, given to a certain number of odes ending with each letter of the alphabet, from a to y. The  $D\bar{1}w\bar{a}n$  is the mode in which most of the poetical works are arranged.

The next most popular poet, whose poems would be the more highly esteemed if better known, particularly in Europe, is Khūshhāl Khān, the celebrated chief of the powerful clan of Khattak, in the reigns of Shah Jehān and Aurangzeb. A warrior as well as a poet, he passed the greater portion of his life in struggling against the oppressive power of the latter Emperor; and defeated the Moghal troops in many an engagement, as he proudly mentions in his "Ode to Spring." Some of his odes, written during his exile in India, are very beautiful, and evince a spirit of patriotism and love of home and country not usual in the Oriental heart, but such as we might look for in the Scottish Highlander or the Swiss mountaineer. The following verse from a poem, written during his confinement in the fortress of Gwalior, by order of Aurangzeb, is characteristic of the man:—

Cheer up then heart! I have by me, That Khūśhhāl Khān's an Afghān true, A healing balm for every throe—Aurangzeb's mortal foc.

* Torū, or Tolū, is a town or cluster of villages in the Yūsufzo'e country, about eleven miles north of Nohshairah, and containing about 5,000 inhabitants.

Khushhāl was unfortunate with regard to some of his children, of whom he had no less than fifty-seven sons, besides a number of daughters. One of these sons, named Bahrām, several times attempted to obtain possession of his father's person to place him in confinement, and, on more than one occasion, even made attempts on his life, in order to get the chieftainship into his own hands.

Notwithstanding all these troubles, however, he was a most voluminous writer, and composed no less (it is said by his family) than three hundred and sixty works, both in the Afghān and the Persian language. The names even of most of these are now lost; but the following are a few which have come under my own observation:—1. A Dīwān, or collection of odes; 2. Kuliyāt, containing an immense number of poems and odes; 3. The Bāz Nāmah, a treatise on the diseases of hawks and falcons, with their cure; 4. Hadāyah, a work on religious jurisprudence, translated from the Arabic; 5. Æināyah, on the same subject, and from the same language; 6. Dastār Nāmah, a treatise on the turban, and the various modes of wrapping it round the head, and the prayers to be used on such occasions; 7. Siḥḥat-ud-dīn, a medical work; 8. Fazal Nāmah, a dispute between the sword and the pen, with the peculiar excellencies of both; and 9. Rubāæiyāt, a collection of stanzas of four lines.

Khushhāl also invented a sort of short-hand, or eigher, which was known only to himself and family. It is termed zanjīrī, or 'chained.' I have several specimens in my possession, but the key has been lost for many years.

A History of the Afghans has been erroneously attributed to Khushhal Khan by Mr. Elphinstone, who is so generally correct; as also a translation into Pushto, of Pilpay's Fables—the Anwari Suhailī of the Persian—and entitled Æayar Dānish, or 'Touchstone of Wisdom.' This is, however, incorrect. The author of the history in question, the only known copy of which I have now before me, is Afzal Khān, the son of Ashraf Khān, who, on the death of his father in the Dakhan, where he had been confined as a state prisoner for the last ten years of his life, succeeded his grandfather, Khushhāl, in the chieftainship of the Khattak tribe. The work is very extensive, consisting of upwards of 1,600 pages in small folio, and is entitled, Tārīkh-i-Murrassæ, or the 'Gold and Gem Studded History.' The translation of Pilpay's Fables is also by Afzāl Khān, and was, as he states in the Preface, undertaken in his fifty-third year, from the abridgment of the Anwari Suhailī, by the celebrated Ab-ul-Fazal, minister of the Emperor Akbar, and made by direction of that monarch. It was entitled 'Kalīlah-wo-Damnah;' and is a great improvement on the bombastic and long-drawn style of the original. Afzal Khān's work may have at first been named Æayār Dānish; but in the Preface he says, that on a second revision, he determined to give his work the title of Æilm Khānah-i-Dānish, or the 'Science-house of Knowledge;' or 'Kalīlah-wo-Damnah'—the names of the two wise jackals mentioned in the work. This book is rare.

Afzal Khān wrote a few other works, and made a number of translations from Arabic and Persian, chiefly historical, viz.:—Aæsam-i-Kūfī, containing the principal incidents of the life of Muḥammad; Si'ar-i-Mullā Maæīn; and Tafsīr-i-Kur'ān, a commentary on the Kurān. He left four sons, one of whom Kāzim, surnamed Shaidā, or 'The Lovelorn,' was the author of a Dīwān, the original and only known copy of which, most beautifully written, with the author's own revisional marks, is in my possession. His style is not so simple as that of the Afghan poets generally—the great charm of their writings—but his poems are of a superior order. He uses many Persian words; and the odes approach nearer than any others to the polish of the poetry of the Persians.

The literary talent, inherent, it would appear, in Khushhāl's family, is surprizing. Five of his sons are also the authors of many excellent works:—

Ashraf Khān, the eldest son, appears to have passed a considerable portion of his life as a state prisoner of Aurangzeb, who probably imagined that Khushhāl's patriotism would be restrained as long as his firstborn should remain in his power. The name assumed by Ashraf, according to the custom of eastern poets, is 'The Severed or Exiled;' and, as might well be imagined, his poems are most pathetic in their style, but at the same time contain many admirable sentiments. The place of Ashraf's exile was Bijāpūr, a strong fortress in the Dakhan, and where his poems were composed: here, too, it was that he died, severed from home and friends.

Æabd-ul-Ķādir Khān, who wielded his sword as bravely as his pen, wrote a Dīwān, or collection of odes, and the love tale of Adam and Durkhāna'i, so celebrated throughout the Afghān country. He also translated into Puśhto, Jāmī's poem of Yūsuf and Zulīkhā; and the Gulistān and Bostān of Shaykh Sāædī; all three celebrated works in the Persian language; and a little work entitled Muæamma, or 'Enigmas and Rebuses.'

Ṣadr Khān—another son—was the author of a Dīwān, and a poem on the popular love tale of Adam and Durkhāna'ī, already referred to. He also translated into Afghānī the well-known Persian poem of Khusrau and Shīrīn of Nizāmī, the first of Persia's romantic poets.

Another son—Sikandar Khān—wrote the poem of Mihr-wo-Mushtarī; and a collection of odes.

A fifth son — Gohar Khān—also wrote a number of minor poems, together with numerous enigmas and chronograms.

Æabd-ur-Raḥīm, Nuṣrāt Khān, Shāhzādah Sikandar, Æajab Khān, Kāmgār Khān, and others of the family, were also gifted with the poetical genius, but their compositions are not to be met with in the present day.

Another still more singular circumstance regarding this family, and particularly when we consider the condition of females in Eastern countries, is the fact that numbers of the ladies of Khushḥāl's family were also gifted with the cacoethes scribendi, and composed numerous poems! One of Khushhāl's own wives, the mother of Ashraf Khān, was a poetess of no mean powers; and although the mention of the females of their families is a most delicate matter with all Afghāns, I have been so fortunate in my researches, that, with the aid of a friendly chief, to whom I am under considerable obligations, I have been able to obtain some of the poetical effusions of the lady referred to, who, it must be remembered, wrote two hundred years since. These will appear in the Text-Book; and also in the translations of some of the choicest of the Afghān poems, a selection from which, together with the memoirs of the different authors, I hope, in the course of next year, to offer to the public in an English dress.

I have also been so fortunate as to discover, since the first edition of this Grammar was published three years since, a collection of poems of great merit, by Khwājah Muḥammad of the Bangaśh tribe, whose work has seldom been heard of, much less seen, in Afghānistan itself. The author lived in Aurangzeb's reign, and led the life of a recluse.

The poems of Aḥmad Shāh Abdālī, the great founder of the Durānī monarchy, and the conqueror of the Murāthī host at Pānīpat, are principally in an amorous and metaphysical strain. His poetry is much esteemed, more so, perhaps, than its merit demands.

The next author to be noticed is Mullā Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd, who flourished in the time of Timūr, the son and successor of Ahmad Shāh, towards the latter part of the last century. His odes, which are mostly of an amorous or moral tendency, contain many admirable sentiments, which would be creditable to any European author. He is the cynical poet and Shaykh Sāædī of the Pushto; and I must say I prefer his poems to any of the others, except those of Khushhāl, whose style, however, is very different. Up to the present day he has certainly never been, neither is he likely to be, surpassed; and the beauty of his compositions is even acknowledged amongst a nation so rich in poets as the Persians, by whom he is styled 'Hamīd, the hair-splitter.' The numerous extracts I have taken from his works, as examples in the Grammar, will give some idea of his poems. His odes are entitled, Dur-wo-Marjān—'Pearls and Corals.' He is also the author of a poem called Nairang-i-æishk, or 'Love's Fascination.' It appears to have been translated from a Persian work of the same name, the author of which was a native of the Panjāb.

The next poet in point of popularity is Mīrzā Khān, a descendant of the notorious Bāyizīd Anṣārī, the founder of the Roshānīān sect, presently to be referred to. His odes are highly metaphysical in their strain, and in accordance with the mystical tenets of the sect; but, at the same time, I must acknowledge that some of them are very sublime. He has been sometimes erroneously called Fat'h Khān, Yūsufzī, which also led me astray in my remarks on the literature of the Afghāns, in the first edition of this work. His poems are somewhat rare.

Kāsim Ælī Khān, of the notorious tribe of Afrīdī, is the author of a Dīwān; but his odes bear the stamp of mysticism, and are of no particular merit. He was, however, a Hindūstānī Afghān, a very different style of being to the real. He was born at Farrukhābād, in Hindūstān, in the time of Nawwāb Muzaffar Jang; and, according to the account given of himself in one of his odes, he was acquainted with Afghānī, Arabic, Tūrkī, Persian, Hindī, and a little English. He has devoted an entire ode to the abuse of the English, just arrived in India, whom—forestalling the first Napoleon—he denominates "A nation of shop-keepers, who, in Hindūstān, have turned soldiers."

There are other poetical works of great merit in the Pushto language, now rarely to be met with; such as the Dīwān of Shāh Sharf, of Jelalābād, which is said to be superior to Hamid's; and that of Pīr Muhammad of Kandahār; the Dīwān of Ælī Khān; the poems of Dawlat, said to have been a Hindū; and those of Mīān Æabd-ur-Raḥīm; Meher Ælī; Arzānī; Ghulām Kādir; Latārr; Ælī Khān; Karīm Khān; Jān Muḥammad; Fāzil; Mukhlis; Sāhib Shāh; and Meher Shāh. Shāh Sharf also translated the Arabic poem, known as the Kasīdah Bardah, into Pushto.

Mullā Dādīn, Khattak, who flourished in the reign of Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī, also composed a collection of odes, as well as a little work on theology, entitled Muntakhab-ul-æakāyid, from the Arabic.

There are also a few living poets whose compositions are by no means deficient in merit, the chief of whom are Mī'ān Muḥammad Bākir, surnamed Æabd, and Mī'ān Muḥammad, surnamed Naghzī; but their works have not been published.

The romantic and interesting poems of Saif-ul-Mulūk and Badrī Jamāl, by Ghulām Muḥammad; and Bahrām Gūr, by Fy'āz, must not be overlooked. The authors were minstrels who sung their own compositions on festive occasions, much in the same manner as our bards of old. These effusions were frequently composed at the request of, or to be dedicated to, some chieftain who generally paid liberally for the honour. The other few works deserving of notice, are: The Tale of the Rose and the Pine; The Jang Nāmah of Amīr Hamzah; Shāh Gadā, 'The King of the Beggars'; and a few others.

There are some poetical works of less importance, pretty generally known. viz.: The Tale of Sultān Jumjumah, by Emām-ud-Dīn; Mærāj Nāmah, by Ghulām Muḥammad; Rashīd-ul-By'ān, by Akhūnd Rashīd, a sort of religious Text-book and Catechism for women and children; Mukhammas,* of Æabd-ul-Kādir; Majmūæāt-i-Kandahārī, and a few others of a similar character.

The works of many authors are little known, because all books have to be copied by the professional scribes chiefly, as was the ease in the dark ages of

Europe before Guttenburg conferred his blessing on mankind; and the charge for transcribing is high. It follows, therefore, that only those in comparatively easy circumstances can afford to purchase such expensive luxuries as books.

The prose writings are also numerous, particularly on divinity.

The most ancient author amongst the Eastern Afghāns, that I am able to discover, is Shaykh Malī, a chief of the Yūsufzīs, who wrote a history of the conquest of Suwāt, and other mountain countries north of the Kābul river, by that powerful tribe, between the years 816 and 828 of the Hijrah—a.d. 1413 to 1424—and the account of the measurement by his orders of the conquered lands, and distribution of them amongst the different clans and families of Yūsuf and Mandarr, and the Kābulīs, Lamghānīs, and people of Nangrahār, who had accompanied them in their immigration into the Peśhāwer valley. It was Shaykh Malī who instituted the wesh, or interchange of land every three or four years, peculiar to the Yūsufzīs and a few petty clans connected with them, referred to by Elphinstone in his "Account of Caubul," under the name of waish, and which is, as in days of yore, rigidly observed in the present day.

Some years subsequently, in the year of the Hijrah 900—A.D. 1494—Khān Kajū became chief of the Yūsufzīs; and during his rule the conquest of Buner and Panjkorah was completed. Of these events he wrote an account, and included in it the history of the Yūsufzī tribe, from the period of its departure from Kābul, during the reign of Mīrzā Ulugh Beg, grandson of Timūr, down to his own time.†

Both these works are extensive, but they are not procurable. They would be invaluable, as being likely to throw some light on the Suwātī dynasty of the Jehāngīrīān Sultāns, claiming descent from Alexander the Great, and who, up to the conquest by the Yūsufzīs, held all the hill countries north of the Kābul river, as far west as the Indus, together with the Alpine Punjāb as far east as the Jhīlum or Hydaspes.

The other more important prose writings are those of Bāzīd, or Bāyizīd Anṣārī, the founder of the Rośhānīān sect, whose tenets caused such a sensation throughout the Afghān countries, and some parts of India, during the reign of the Emperor Akbar. Bāzīd took to himself the name of Pīr-i-Rośhān, or the 'Saint of Light,' from the Persian word 'rośhān,' signifying 'light,' and hence the name given to the whole sect. One work is entitled Khair-ul-By'ān, or 'Exposition of Goodness,' written in four languages—Puśhto or Afghānī, Arabie, Persian, and Hindī, to which Akhūnd Darwezah gave the title of Sharr-ul-By'ān, or 'Exposition of Depravity;' another, entitled Khurpān, the meaning of which word is not known at present, a burlesque on the word, "Furkān," as the Kurān is also called; and, т This history is the one from which the Persian work, Tārīkh Ḥāfig Raḥmat Khānī, now in the East India House, was composed, а.н. 1184.

Vol. ii., p. 20.

like the others, is written in contempt of the Muhammadan faith; together with several pamphlets on the same subject. Copies of his works are exceedingly scarce, all having been burnt on which the Mullās could lay their hands during his lifetime, and at his death, and the subsequent dispersion of the sect. There are no doubt copies existing in the possession of those who still secretly follow his doctrines, and they are not a few, but they fear to produce them.

Bāzīd or Pīr Rośhān was principally assisted in his literary labours by Mullā Arzānī, whose pen was a very sharp one. The latter was also the author of a Diwān, and other poetical works, which have now entirely disappeared.

The Makhzan-ul-asrār, or Makhzan Afghānī, as it is more commonly called, was written, as well as other works, by Akhūnd Darwezah,* the venerated Saint of the Afghāns, in refutation of the opinions of Pīr Rośhān, who found a bitter antagonist in the Ākhūnd, who conferred upon him the nick-name of Pīr-i-Tārīk, or the 'Saint of Darkness,' by which he is best known in Afghānistān up to the present day. Akhūnd Darwezah is said to have been the author of upwards of fifty works, the greater number pamphlets probably; but with the exception of the foregoing, and the Tazkirat-ul-abarār, in Persian, they are not known in the present day. His son Karīm Dād appears to have assisted his father in the composition of these works.

The other prose writings remaining to be noticed, are, the Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h, or 'Advantages of the Laws Ecclesiastical,' a very valuable work, written in the year A.H. 1125, A.D. 1713, by Ākhūnd Ķāsim, who was the chief prelate and the head of all the Muḥammadan ecclesiastics of Hasht-nagar and Peśhāwer, which places, in those days, rivalled Bokhārā itself, in learning; the works of Bābū Jān, a converted Sī-āh-posh Kāfir, who, having acquired a great name amongst the Muḥammadans for his learning, again relapsed; the Jang Nāmah, containing the history of Ḥasan and Ḥusain, by Ghulām Muḥammad; another work on the same subject by Sayyid Ḥasan, written about a hundred years since; the Nūr Nāma'h, by Jān Muḥammad; Adam and Durkhāna'ī, by Fakhr-ud-Dīn, Ṣaḥibzādah; Gulistān-i-Raḥmat, by Nawwāb Muḥammad Mustajib Khān, in the year 1800 A.D.; Tafsīr, a commentary and paraphrase of the Kur'ān; Hazār Masā'īl; Ḥiyātu-l-Mumīnīn; Akhīr Nāma'h, and several others. Copious extracts from the choicest of the works mentioned in the foregoing pages, both poetical and prose, will be found in the Text Book, published at the same time as this work.

Besides the translations into Pushto from the Persian and Arabic authors * Professor Dorn in his "Chrestomathy" states that Akhūnd Darwezah was the first author who composed in the Afghan language; but he neither states how he has arrived at this conclusion, nor his authority for such a statement. In the same manner he considers Khūshhāl Khān to be the author of Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī. Both conclusions are entirely incorrect. Shaykh Malī, as shown in the preceding page, wrote his history about a century-and-a-half before. In the same manner, it is proved that two of Khushhāl's sons, each composed a poem on the love tale of Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī. Another version, in prose, by one Fakhr-ud-Dīn, was written about a hundred years ago.

already enumerated, both poetical and prose, there are a few others which have come under my own observation:—the Gulistān of Sāædī, translated by Amīr Muḥammad, Anṣārī; Majnūn and Lailā of Jāmī, by Bai Khān, of Buner; the Kasīdah Surī'ānī; and the Kasīdah Bardah, by Akhūnd Darwezah.*

There are two valuable lexicographical works,—the Rī'āz-ul-Maḥabbat, or 'Gardens of Friendship,' by the Nawwāb Ḥāfiz Maḥabbat Khān, compiled at the request of Sir George Barlow in 1805–6. It is an extensive work, but is chiefly devoted to the conjugation of the Afghān verbs, which are exceedingly difficult from their irregularity. The author, however, was a native of Hindūstān; and many peculiarities regarding the verbs and tenses, of which he must have been ignorant, have been omitted. The vocabulary is valuable. The other work, entitled Æajā'īb-ul-Lughat, or 'Curiosities of Language,' was written about the year 1808, by Nawwāb Allāh Yār Khān of the Barech tribe, who was also a native of India, but it is very valuable.

There is a host of ballad writers, and some of their compositions, sung by the wandering minstrels, are very spirited, and put me in mind of those of our own land. During my residence at Peśhāwer I had several of them written out. The following is a specimen of one which I have attempted to turn into English ballad style, retaining in some measure the metre of the original. The translation is almost literal.

THE FIGHT AT NOHS'HAIRAH.

In misery and grief I'm plung'd, By ruthless Fate's decree; Alas! that from its ernel laws There's no escape for me.

What shall I say of Abbās Khān, That Khattak chief so bold; At his sad fate I'm sorely griev'd, And that by me'tis told. He first did march to Wuzīr Bāgh, *
Where cypresses do wave;
And there he muster'd all his clan—
They were like lions brave.

He from Peshāwer then did start,
For Æazīm Khān to fight;
And with five hundred Khattaks true,
He reached Nohshair that night.

* The so-ealled translation into Pushto of the New Testament, made by the Serampore Missionaries in 1818, bears a very slight resemblance to the Sacred Writings; in fact, it is quite painful to read. I will merely give one specimen—the well-known verse from the Sermon on the Mount—"Judge not, that ye be not judged." The Pushto is in the following terms:—

- "Do not justice unto any one, lest justice shall be done unto you!!" Is this Christian doctrine? Verily, if Infidels are to judge of our religion from such translations as this, it is not to be wondered at that they should scoff at it, hold our faith in ridicule, and call us kāfirs or blasphemers. It is quite evident that, in making this translation, the English has been merely transposed for the Pushto, without the slightest consideration as to difference of idiom, style, and arrangement of the languages. I trust the other translations of the Scriptures are better than the Pushto one, which is the most ridiculous thing I have ever met with.
- † The battle of Noh hairah was fought in 1823, between the Afghāns under Sirdār Muḥammad Æazīm Khān, Bārakzo'e, brother of Dost Muḥammad Khān, and the Sikhs under Runjīt Singh, in which Abbās Khān, Khattak was slain, besides a host of Yūsufzo'es.
- † The Wūzīr Bāgh, or Minister's Garden, lies outside the city of Peshāwer to the south. It contains a residence, and was remarkable on account of the number of cypress trees it formerly contained. The garden was laid out by Sirdār Fat'h Khān, the celebrated Wūzīr of Muḥammad Shāh, and the brother of Dost Muḥammad Khān, Bārakzo'e, ruler of Kābul. The garden has since been chiefly occupied by the other brother, Sultān Muḥammad Khān, and his numerous Ḥaram.

When morning dawn'd, the Sikhs advanc'd
The Afghān host to crush;
But Ghāzīs* they, on Nānak's sons†
Did like a torrent rush.

On Khaiber's heights, when rains do pour,
And wintry blasts do blow,
The little rills, to torrents swell'd,
All Jamrūd's plain to'erflow.

That day they kill'd of Singhs enough
Of heads to raise a dome;
But 'twas decree'd Nohshairah's plain
To them should be a tomb.

At eventide, the chieftain's steed
Fell midst a heap of slain;
By night, his band, oh! where were they?
Dead on the bloody plain!

Night clos'd around him, still he fought,
All faint and out of breath:
A Ḥouri's § hand the Sherbet gives;
The Martyr meets his death.

To spare his life, the Sikhs they did
Pledge every sacred word:
No Heav'n they dread—deceitful foes!
They put him to the sword.

In Akorra | when this tale was told,

The people were dismay'd;

And when night came, the hero's corse

They from the field convey'd.

It seem'd the latter day was come, So sore aggriev'd were they; And minstrels did their rebeks break, Deep sorrow to display.

Next morning from Akorra then
Set out a mournful train;
And to Peshawer bore the corpse,
Of him so basely slain.

The people of Peshāwer wept,
When they his fate did hear;
And then they laid the body in The grave-yard of Pānj Pīr. ¶

Hakīm! lament for Abbās Khān,
That Khattak chief so bold;
Oh where! the like of him, oh where!
Shall we again behold?

- * Ghāzī—one who fights against infidels, a gallant soldier.
- † Nānak-the name of the Saint of the Sikhs, and the founder of the sect.
- ‡ "Jamrūd's plain"—"After heavy rains in the mountains, the rivulets, swelled to torrents, rush from the hills with violence, and earry everything before them." See my Account of Peśhāwer: On the rivers of the Province. "Bombay Geographical Transactions," 1851-52.
- § Ḥourī—a black-eyed nymph of the Muḥammadan Paradise, of which every true believer is to have no less than seventy-two.
  - Akorrā is a small town about ten miles west of the Indus or Attak: it is the chief town of the Khattak tribe.
- ¶ "The grave-yard of Pānj Pīr"—the Zī'ārat-i-Pānj Pīr, or the "Shrine of the Five Saints," is situated about a mile south-east of Peshāwer.

GRAMMAR

OF THE

PUKHTO OR PUSHTO LANGUAGE.

"In languages which have both a written and a spoken form, the usages of the former rather than the latter are held to determine the rules of grammar. The written is always more perfect than the spoken form of a language. The latter exhibits actual usage; but the former exhibits also national and reputable usage."

J. M. M'Culloch, D.D.

CHAPTER I.

THE ALPHABET.

- 1. The Pushto, or language of the Afghāns, is written in the imaskh character of Arabie, which is of the same general use amongst the Arabs as the Roman in Europe.* It succeeded the Kūfik in which the Kor'ān was first written; and is considered to have had a common origin with the Hebrew and Chaldaik, from the Semitic.†
- 2. It was invented in the third century of the Hijrah by Ibn Moklah, who was successively wuzīr or minister to the Khālifs, Al Moktadir, Al Kāhir, and Al Rādī, who occupied the throne of Bāghdād about three hundred years after the time of the Prophet—from 908 to 940 of our era; and was subsequently altered and improved by Nāzim and Tograi, who were respectively ministers to the Khālifs, Jelāl-ud-Dīn and Māsūd. It was brought to great perfection by Alī Ibn Bowāb, who flourished in the following century, and other celebrated caligraphists, amongst whom was Yakūt-al-Mostāsimī, the Secretary of Al Mostāsim, the eighth of the Abbāsīdis, with whom the glory of his family and nation expired.‡

5. The eastern Afghāns, such as the tribes of Peśhāwer, the Ut-mān Khel, the Yūsufzīs of the Sama'h, of Suwāt, Panjkorah, and Buner, and many others, often change the coccurring in Persian words, used in Pushto, into which they pronounce khūn, and use the letter instead of . In the same manner the western Afghāns invariably give the softer sound of shey, and use in place of the Dāmānīs and Ghalzīs substitute for cond the Khaiberīs alter the place of the letters so much that at first it is difficult to understand them.

* The system of orthography followed for the last three centuries or more, with these exceptions, was first arranged by Akhānd Darwezah, the celebrated saint of the Afghāns, and the great antagonist of Pīr Roshān, the founder of the Roshnīān sect.

6. Although the different tribes are widely dispersed, and often hold little or no intercourse with each other, no very considerable variation exists with regard to the pronunciation, beyond what has been noticed above. Where such cases occur, the ear will be found a sure, and at the same time, easy guide, together with the knowledge of the powers of the Arabian letters, with which the student is supposed to be already acquainted.

THE VOWELS.

جركات harkāt.

- 7. There are three vowels in Pushto, as in Arabic and Persian; viz.: (مر) عنا عنا المعالمة عنا
- 8. The consonants 1, 2, are often found in old manuscript works, used instead of these vowel points; and, in this respect, the language bears a striking resemblance to the Zend and Sanskrit, which express all the long and short vowels by distinct marks. This will be more fully explained in another place.
- 9. The vowels, if not followed by the letters i, j, i, represent the short vowels a, i, u, respectively; thus i, i, and i, i, but the consonant must invariably begin the syllable.
- 10. Should the vowels be followed by l, l, l, respectively, then the syllable is long, as l,  $b\bar{u}$ ,  $b\bar{u}$ ,  $b\bar{u}$ ; and these three letters l, l, are then called quiescent and homogeneous with their preceding vowels.
- 11. When (—) zabar is followed by و or و, the syllable then becomes a dipthong, as في bai, or baey.
- 12. There are some cases in Persian in which preceded by having the vowel fat'ha'h or zabar, and succeeded by h is very slightly, if at all, sounded. Thus خواب (sleep) is pronounced kh'āb not khwāb, and خواب (a table) kh'ān, not khwān. It must, however, be borne in mind that it is quite the contrary in Puśhto, and all the letters must be sounded; for example—خواب khwārī, 'humility,' خواب khwākhey or khwāśhey, 'a wife's mother.'
- 13. ° or ^, جزم, or جزم, jazma'h, placed over a consonant, shows that the letter is quiescent and the syllable ends there; as پرهر par-har, 'a wound,' څرمن par-man, 'leather.'
- 14.  $\sim$ , مده, or مه, madda'h or madd, is another form of l (alif), and, placed over a letter, prolongs the sound; as آس  $\bar{a}s$ , 'a horse,'  $\bar{a}\underline{s}hzaey$ , 'a thorn,' and  $\bar{a}\underline{k}h\underline{k}h$ , 'alas!'

- 15. -, تشدید tashdīd, signifies that the consonant must be doubled; but this remark has a reference more to Arabic words used in Pushto than Pushto itself; thus, יָל tawallā, 'friendly.'
- 17. <sup>5</sup>, المحرّة hamza'h, is another form of alif, as  $^{\sharp}$  or  $_{\sharp}$  a,  $_{i}$  or  $_{\sharp}$  i,  $^{\sharp}$  or  $_{\sharp}$  u. The Persians call it softened hamza'h.
- 18. As the Pushto writings, particularly those on Theology and the like, contain a number of Arabic words, it is as well to mention the تنوین tanwīn, signifying nunnation. It is formed by doubling the terminating vowel, and expressed by double zabar, zer, and pesh (*, *, *) when they take the sound of an, in, and un respectively; as رُيت رجل ra'etu rajulan, 'I beheld a man;' مرت برجل jā'anī rajulan, 'A man came to me.'

CHAPTER II.

THE PARTS OF SPEECH.

Salima'h.

- 19. The Afghān language, like the Arabic model on which it is based, contains but three parts of speech—the نعل ism or noun, the عنف fiæl or verb, and the مونف harf or particle. Those who have studied the Persian language, and are in some measure acquainted with the Arabic terms of grammar, will require no explanation of the above; but as it may tend to puzzle Europeans unacquainted with the rules of Arabian grammarians, I shall subdivide these three parts of speech into those with which they are more familiar.
- 20. The Pushto language contains no article: the article is supposed to be inherent in the noun, or is expressed by the indefinite numeral y yow, or the demonstrative pronouns, as in the following examples:—

"He who sitteth on a throne, and may neither possess capacity nor understanding, Is either a Lion, or a wolf, or otherwise account him an ox or an ass."

- Khushḥāl Khān, Khattak.

بيا له كومه را پيدا شه دا بهار چه په هر لورِ في ملك كړيو ګلذار ارغوان دي ضميران سوسن ريحان دي ياسمن دي نسترن نرګس ګلنار

"From whence has the spring again returned unto us,
Which has made the whole country round a garden of flowers?
There is the anemone and sweet-basil; the lily and sweet-herbs;
The jasmine and white-rose; the narcissus and pomegranate blossom."

—Khushḥāl Khān, Khattak.

CHAPTER III.

THE NOUN.

اسم Ism.

- 21. A noun denotes simply the name of an object, as سړي sarraey, 'a man,' kor, 'a house.'
- 22. The term (ism) includes nouns substantive, nouns adjective, numeral nouns, pronouns, and the past and present participles; but, for the reasons before stated, I have generally adopted the divisions and terms of grammar most convenient to Europeans, and therefore the pronouns will be treated of separately, and the participles with the verbs.
- 23. Nouns may be divided into substantive and adjective. The former are either primitive or derivative.
- 24. A primitive noun is that which proceeds from no other word in the language; as, خلک halak, 'a boy,' جینځ  $j\bar{\imath}na'\bar{\imath}$ , 'a girl,' ما  $\bar{\imath}a\bar{s}$ , 'a horse,' کر 'husbandry,' بیار  $bad\underline{n}a'h$ , 'a bribe,' بیار  $w\bar{\imath}ar$ , 'jealousy.'
- 25. Derivative nouns are those which spring from other nouns, or from verbs; as, ييا تياره tūāra'h, 'blackness,' ييل beltūn, 'separation,' يياره wainā, 'speech,' ييل إله beltūn, 'separation,' يياره wainā, 'speech,' يياره الموي 'khegarra'h or shegarra'h, 'goodness,' رزه سوي 'ranṛrā, 'brightness,' ود سوي 'z'ṛrah, s'waey, 'sympathy.'
- 26. Nouns are of two numbers or اعداد awdād, as in Persian,—اهداد wāḥid or singular, and جنسان jamaw or plural; and of two genders or بخكر jinsān; viz., muzakkar or masculine, and مونث mūannas or feminine, the whole of which will be explained in their proper places.
- 27. There are seven إعراباة iwrābūt or eases;—the nominative, or حالت فاعلي أهلاء- hālat-i-fāwilī; the genitive, or حالت اضافت hālat-i-izāfat; the dative, or حالت اضافت hālat-i-mafawūl; the accusative, or حالت مفعول به hālat-i-mafawūl bihi; the vocative, or حالت بري halat-i-nida; the ablative, or حالت جري halat-i-jarri; and the خالت fawil, or actor; or, as it may be termed, the instrumental case.

- 28. To form the various cases besides the nominative, several particles called جروف جر hurūf-i-jarr are used with the nouns in the inflected state.
- 29.  $3 da^*$  or sometimes 33 dah, the particle governing the genitive case, must always precede the noun, as will be seen from the following examples:—

"The heart lamenteth at the depredations or thy beauty,

Like as the heart of the nightingale bewaileth when the autumn is come."

-Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"Be not captivated by the friendship of the people of the world! This shameless, faithless, immodest world."—Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"Thou who seekest in the parterre after the rose of friendship,

Be aware of the stump and the thorn tree of separation."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

30. The particle is not subject to any change in prose more than in verse, as will be seen from the following extract. Akhūnd Ķāsim says:—

"To make enquiry AFTER the sick is also the law of the Prophet, and a regulation of the true orthodox faith; (and) whosoever enquireth AFTER the sick, entereth into the mercy of the Almighty."—Fanā id-ush-Sharī aah.

- 31. In this manner I shall continue to give quotations from the various Afghān authors as I proceed: such examples will not only serve, in some measure, as specimens of the style, and be more easily retained in the memory than simple prose, but they will also show that the Pushto has a grammatical system as regular as that of most languages.
- 32. There are four particles governing the dative ease,—& tah, or &, watah, and &, wa-watah, one, of which is sometimes placed before the noun, and the after it; and & lah. The latter is less often used, as a particle similar in form governs the ablative; but the meaning is unmistakable, as will be seen from the examples I shall give.

"They then seized their fire-arms and ascended to the crest of the mountain, and from that position called out; 'Whoever are men amongst you, come to the sword;' but veneration for the Khān was so predominant with every one, that notwithstanding that wretch had given them directions (to seize him), yet no one could carry them out."—Afzal Khān; Tārīkh-i-Muraṣṣaæ.

"He who ever scrutinizes (TO) the faults of others, Why did the Almighty make him ignorant of his own."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"The greatness and dignity of the great becometh not a particle less, Should they at any time say UNTO a child, 'Come here.'"—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"They who are in love with the world are the greatest of all fools;
Like the baby, they show great eagerness for the flaming fire."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"Since it was my good fortune to conquer Hind,

I now go то Īrān both with banner and drum,"—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

The following prose examples are from the Fawā'id-ush-Sharī'æa'h, in which the various particles of the dative may be seen.

"Fourth—alms also should be given to the slave who wishes to manumit himself, that he may repay (to) his proprietor, and by means of it release his neck from the yoke. The fifth is the debtor. Alms should also be given to the debtor, that by their assistance he may pay off his debts. The sixth are Pilgrims, Champions or Soldiers of the Faith, and Devotees. Alms should also be given to these, that by means of them they may perform their pilgrimage, fight for the faith, and carry out the object of their vows."

33. The particles of the dative case are often used to denote 'for,' 'for the sake of,' etc., and must be used or translated accordingly. Thus:—

"If the breast of the partridge is for the falcon,

For the spider is the breast of the fly."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"The anguish of love hath no such injurious effect,

That the afflicted one desireth a remedy for it."—Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

34. According to the Arabic system, on which the Muḥammadan languages are based, the noun has but two variations from the nominative, (terming the latter fāæil, or actor); the فاعل iṣāfat, or attribute; and the فاعل mafaæūl, or acted upon, in which the dative, accusative, and ablative cases are included. Pushto has another or second form, as it may be termed, of the مفعول mafaæūl, or dative, similar to the objective case of our own language, in which the particles هذه بالمواجعة با

Here Æumar, as the فاعل or actor, is in the nominative case; Zeid's, as expressing the relation of the ownership, is in the intribute, or genitive; and horse, being the name of the object acted upon, is in the or active. In the preceding sentence, the actor must be placed at the commencement, or, in other words, the noun or pronoun at the commencement of the sentence is the actor. For instance, if we merely change the noun Æumar for horse, and vice versâ, the signification is, "Zeid's horse strikes Æumar," or exactly contrary. As all verbs in the language agree with the object in the past tenses in gender and number, it can be easily distinguished; but this second form of the dative is one of the difficulties of Pushto, and is only to be got over by practice in the language. Examples of this case are contained in the following couplets:—

"The prince of prudence and reason himself sinketh his own LIFE,
When he entertaineth a desire towards the taxes of the country of love."

-Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"All the injustice and oppression of the world is acceptable to ME,

If God separateth ME not from the object of my love.— Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

35. The next case is the accusative,* which remains the same as the nominative, or assumes the dative form, as:

"I give thee much good advice, But I am not acting on it myself."—Mīrzā Khān, Anṣārī.

* In old books, nouns may be found in this case inflected; as, يو ورڅ 'on a certain,' or 'on one day.'

چه نا اهلُ ته دَ اهلُ ويناً وايم زه حميد به دَ منصُور په دود په دار شم "If I speak to the unworthy the words of the good, I Hamīd shall become like Manṣūr,* on the stake."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"With heart dried up, I sit all day long in the moisture of my tears;
In my own cell, love showed to me both OCEAN and LAND."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

36. The vocative case is denoted by the Arabic sign (ai, sometimes pronounced ay, together with (100 and (100); but the latter signs are rarely used in writing, and are peculiar to Afghānī. The vocative sign, when used, must precede the noun, which, with but few exceptions, takes (4) zabar after the final letter, and sometimes adds 1 or s instead, as will be seen from the examples, and the declensions of nouns.

اي رحمان ك بلبلو لفظ زده كړه كوه كنه پس پصفت ك كل اندام ش Он Raunān, first learn the song of the nightingales!

Then commence to praise the rosy-bodied."—Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

37. Sometimes the noun takes the final ( $\stackrel{\leftarrow}{-}$ ) for s without being preceded by any sign of the vocative, as:

"Ravisher of hearts! Oh, unmerciful one! Why not give one glance?"
—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

38. The ablative case is governed by the particles & lah, or & & lah nah, the & preceding, and the & following the noun. The noun in this case, in some instances takes (-) or (-) after the final letter, which will be seen on reference to the declensions. The other particles used in this case are z tar and & da or & di. The latter form is not common except amongst the Khattak tribe, who do not appear to make much, if any, difference between it and the & of the genitive, but it may generally be known from being followed by &. The following are examples of the ablative case:

* Al Manṣūr, a Sūfī who was put to death for making use of the words, اناالحقى 'I am God.'

+ It should be borne in mind that there is little or no difference made in Pushto between (—), 1, and s, and between (—) and ي. For example, دلبرد , محبّوبًا , خونخوار , etc., the whole of which are in the vocative ease.

"Mention not the name of absence, O Khūshḥāl Khān! Тикоиси separation my very bones are broken in pieces." *

Khūshhāl Khān, Khattak.

"He cutteth away the branch from beneath his own feet,
Who nurtureth in his heart malice towards his friends."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

39. Examples of the ablative  $\varphi$  di are contained in the following couplets: as previously stated, they are not often to be met with in the writings of standard authors.

"I will consider the monitor the real cause of it, Should I suffer any injury from patience and long-suffering."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"When they marched from the banks of the Āb-i-sind (the Indus), a panther suddenly made his appearance, which set up a roar and caused great confusion and perturbation amongst the horses. On this they assailed him on all sides with arrows, swords, and spears; and the Emperor Bābarr himself discharged an arrow at the animal, which plunged into the river, but he was drawn out."—Afzal Khān: Tārīkh-i-Muraṣṣaæ.

40. The locative, which I shall include in this case, merely substitutes other particles in place of  $\lambda$ ,  $\lambda$ , and  $\lambda$ . They are  $\lambda$ , pah or pah, which precede the noun, and have various significations, such as 'in,' 'on,' 'with,' 'through,' 'by means of,' etc.; and کښی  $k\underline{k}hey$  or  $k\underline{s}hey$ , or  $k\underline{s}hi$ , which usually follow a noun preceded by  $\lambda$  and signify 'in' or 'within.' Other particles are also used in this case such as  $pah-m\overline{t}-\overline{a}n$ ,  $pah-m\overline{t}-yandz$ , etc.; the whole of which will be found in their proper places. Examples:—

"One man becometh merry and gay at the afflictions of another.

Through the weeping of the dew, the rose smileth and blooms."—Balvām Gūr.

in modern MSS کش and کشی in modern MSS با Literally, 'I am in pieces in my bones.' با These words are often erroneously written ستا دَ شونډو له رطبَ هس خوند دي چه دا خوند نشي موندَ په نخلستان کښِ "There is such deliciousness In the ripeness of thy lips,

That it is impossible to find such sweetness even in the date grove."

شجر منگور ک الکیا می د په زړد هجر منگور ک الکیا می د په زړد هجر منگور ک "How can my understanding remain IN its proper place, Oh beloved one?

When thou appliest to my heart the viper of separation."— Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

- 41. The whole of the particles governing the different cases just described, remain unchanged both before masculine and feminine nouns, and in the singular and plural number.

چه دَ ګلو پریشاني شود ور څرګنده غاچي سر په زانو کښیښو خندا نکا "Since the dishevelled state of the roses became manifest unto it,

The BUD placed its head on its knees, and smileth not."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

نماني دَ رحمان زړه دي کباب کړي له احوال ئي څوک نه دي خبر دار "Cruel fate hath scorched the heart of Raḥmān: Of its state no one hath any conception."

- 43. There are two genders in Pushto, مذكر muzakkar, or masculine, and مونث mūannas, or feminine; and they affect the terminations of nouns, adjectives, and verbs.
- 44. The genders of many nouns can be distinguished by attention to the different powers of the letters s and s, in which a great number of them terminate.

When the former occurs at the end of a word, it may be either هاي ظاهر (hā-i-zā-hir) apparent or perceptible h, as in عارفه weśhtah or wekhtah, 'hair,' and قارفه kār-ghah, 'a crow;' or هاي خفي (hā-i-khafī) imperceptible, secret, or concealed h, as in هاي خفي غيم غير غيره (hā-i-khafī) imperceptible, secret, or concealed h, as in هاي غيره غيره wīna'h, 'blood.' All words terminating in the former are masculine, and those ending in the latter are feminine.

The above form of  $\underline{\omega}$  is also used as the Puśhto  $y\bar{a}$ -i-nisbat, to express relation or connexion; as, كابلخ  $k\bar{a}$ -bul, 'the city of Kābul,' كابلخ  $k\bar{a}$ - $bul\bar{a}$ , 'men of Kābul.'

Nouns terminating in yā-i-maœ-rūf mā-ķabl-i-hamza'h-i-khafī-i-maksūr, or ي preceded by (ع) hamza'h and (ج) kasra'h, are all feminine, and are both singular and plural; as, جيني jīna'ī, 'a girl or girls.' It is also used as the feminine yā-i-nisbat; as, پيښاور په peśhāwer or pekhāwer, 'the city of Peśhāwer;' پيښاور په peśhāwera'ī or pekhāwera'ī, 'a female or females of Peśhāwer.'

Many feminine nouns, amongst which will be found a great many Persian derivatives, terminate in  $y\bar{a}$ -i-maw- $r\bar{u}f$   $m\bar{a}$ -kabl-i-maks $\bar{u}r$ , or  $\omega$  preceded by ( $\varphi$ ) kasra'h, which is changed to  $\omega$  preceded by ( $\varphi$ ) hamza'h and ( $\varphi$ ) hamza'h (explained in the preceding paragraph) in the plural; as, ميرڅي  $m\bar{v}r$ - $t\bar{s}\bar{v}$ , 'trouble,' 'distress;'  $m\bar{v}r$ - $t\bar{s}u'\bar{v}$ , 'troubles,' 'distresses.'

Other nouns again, chiefly foreign words which have crept into the language, terminating in  $\underline{\omega}$ , may be either masculine or feminine, and form their plurals by affixing the terminations على الله ع

Nouns terminating in  $y\bar{a}$ -i-mau- $k\bar{u}f$ , or silent  $\omega$ , are all masculine, and affix other terminations for the plural; as,  $\underline{dzo'e}$ , 'a son,'  $\underline{\omega}e$ , 'a hare,' the rules respecting which will be seen from the following declensions.

- 46. The gender of some nouns is distinguishable from the sex of those to whom they are applicable; as, ميره merrah or سوره merrah, 'a husband,' مانديك mān-dīna'h, 'a wife.' In other instances they are expressed by words totally different from each other; as, پاره plār, 'a father,' مور mor, 'a mother,' ورور w'ror, 'a brother,' خور khor, 'a sister.'
- 48. Pushto nouns have nine declensions, distinguished according to the various methods of inflection, and the formation of the nominative plural. Several declensions have two or more varieties.

1st Declension.

49. This comprehends all nouns which inflect the oblique cases of the singular and nominative plural. It has two varieties.

- 50. The first variety consists of nouns ending in في (with fat-ḥa'h and yā quiescent) which take (ع) in the vocative, the whole of which are masculine; as, sarraey, 'a man,' خري m'dzaraey, 'a tiger,' مرئي m'rayaey, 'a slave,' etc.
- 51. The oblique plural of all nouns in this language, with the exception of those of the 9th declension, is formed by substituting, or (:) for the final letter of the nominative plural, and therefore requires no further explanation.

سري sarracy, ' a man.'

4TH DECLENSION.

- 61. The first variety merely add the  $(\stackrel{\cancel{\underline{}}}{=})$  sometimes  $\stackrel{\cancel{\underline{}}}{\downarrow}$ , for the singular oblique and nominative plural; as,  $\stackrel{\cancel{\underline{}}}{=} \underline{\underline{ah}al}$ , 'a thief,'  $\stackrel{\cancel{\underline{}}}{=} \underline{\underline{ah}l}$ , 'a companion.'

The nouns of this declension are not subject to inflection except in the vocative singular, which, if masculine, take ( $\angle$ ) fut-ha'h, and if feminine, ( $\angle$ ) kasra'h, sometimes written with s and s instead. They may be divided into four classes—those which take s, or significantly, or in the nominative plural, and those whose plurals are irregular. The nouns embraced in this declension are mostly names of human beings, or animals; and contain a number of exotic words which have erept into Pushto from the languages spoken in the countries bordering on Afghānistān, together with numerous primitive nouns. They are both masculine and feminine, but the former predominate.

ism-i-sifat.

79. The Adjective, called the اسم صفت ism-i-sifut, or noun of quality, denotes some property or attribute of the noun; as, zeta, 'black,' بندر zeta, 'black,' بندري zeta, 'black,' الور zeta, 'black,' الألام or zeta, 'good,' ناكار zeta nandaraey, 'short.' Example:—

"There is no such WEAK intoxication in the wine of love,
As becometh quenched by the sourness of admonitions."—Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

80. The adjective should in all cases precede the noun, as:

"Suwāt is intended to give sovereigns gladness, and delight;
But now in the time of the Yūsufzīs, it is a desolate caravansary.
On the north it is bounded by the mountains of Bilaūristān;*
To the east lies Kashmīr; to the west is Kābul and Badakhshān.
Towards Hindūstān it has black mountains and frowning passes,
In the ascent of which, armies will get entangled, and confusion ensue."

-Khushhāl Khān, Khattak.

"If on a marriage day a person dresseth himself in RED coloured clothes, if that dress be of cotton which was originally RED, then the wearing of such garments is RIGHT and LAWFUL."

—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

- 81. The adjective admits of but three forms—the nominative, oblique, and vocative, in the same manner as the noun, although it has also seven eases. The actor is the same as the oblique, and the remainder are made up by the addition of the different particles.
- 82. Some adjectives are undeclinable,† and are not subject to change for number; with this exception, they assume the same terminations in gender, number, and ease, as the nouns they qualify. The following are examples:

"Like as by applying tire, one setteth DRY grass in a blaze, So doeth love to devotion, and to piety."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamūd.

"Those eyes, whether they be narcissuses or almonds, Became Sharp swords for slaughtering me.—Eabd-ur-Rahman.

—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdātī.

85. Adjectives may be, and often are, used alone, the substantive being understood; thus:

نه قدم لري نه دم همدم د شکليو کورد شمعه پا بسته سر بريده

"Nor footstep nor breath hath the friend of the FAIR: Behold the candle, foot-bound, and head severed!"—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"The locks of the beloved are the desired objects of every one, Whether OLD or YOUNG, whether GREAT or SMALL."—Eabd-ur-Raḥmān.

86. Adjectives are declined in the same manner as substantives, as explained at paragraph 82.

ghatt (masc.) غټ ghatta'h (fem.) 'stout,' 'thick.'

	M.	F.
Nom.	غټ gh a tt, or	غټه gh a tt a'h,	stout or thick.

$\mathbf{Act}.$	يُّ gh a tt āno, or	gh atto,	by stout, etc.

87. Adjectives having wāw-i-maj-hūl (concealed or unknown, as not occurring in Arabie) as one of its letters, and in sound like o in the English word robe, change the, to in the singular oblique and nominative plural, and affix hā-i-zāhir (or perceptible h), to the final letter, but the is sometimes retained; as, wrost, 'rotten,' pl. وراسته wrāstah; نوروست wrāstah; خواری khojz, 'sweet,' pl. خواری khwājzah; وراسته sārrah; مورد sārrah; مورد mārrah. For the feminine form the is dropped, and s (hā-i-khafī) affixed, which is changed to (yā-i-maj-hūl) or () kasra'h in the singular oblique and nominative plural; but the plural oblique cases are the same, in the plural, for both genders.

88. There are a number of adjectives, principally the active and past participles of verbs, which in the masculine, terminate like the nouns of the first variety of the 1st declension in  $(y\bar{a}-i-m\bar{a}-kabl-i-maft\bar{u}h)$ , and whose feminines take  $(y\bar{a}-i-maj-h\bar{u}l)$ , or (¬) kasra'h in the singular; as يندونكي wa-yūnkaey, 'a speaker;' ماتيدونكي mātedūnkaey, 'brittle,' (lit. a breaker); نينتي n'khataey, or n'shataey, 'entrapped;' ويرونكي werawūnkaey, 'alarming,' 'terrifie;' عرونكي werawūnkaey, 'a little child,' etc. Both take (yā-i-maærūf) in the singular oblique and the nominative plural, and  $(w\bar{a}w-i-maj-h\bar{u}l)$  in the oblique cases, and may be thus declined:

89. The ordinal numbers اسماي عدد اسماي عدد اسماي عدد asmā'e-æadad are declinable, and subject to the same changes by inflection as other adjectives; thus, رنبي خل rrunbaey dzal, 'the first time,' دريمه مياشت dweam kāl, 'the second year,' دريمه مياشت dreama'h mī-āsht, 'the third month,' په څاورم کور کښي pah tsaloram kor kkhey, 'in the fourth house,' الما له پنځمي نبځي نه الما له پنځمي نبځي نبځي نه الما له پنځمي نبځي نه الما له پنځمي نبځي نبځي نه الما له پنځمي نبځي نه الما له الما له پنځمي نبځي نه الما له الما له پنځمي نبځي نه الما له پنځمي نبځي نه الما له الما له په الما له الما

"The Prophet of God hath said: I am overjoyed on account of three things; first, that I am an Arab; second, that the Kur'ān is in Arabic; and third, that the language of Heaven will be the Arabian.—Fawā'id-ush Sharī'æa'h.

90. The adjunct of similitude شان غلاقه مان غلاقه مان غلاقه غلاقه مان غلاقه على غلاقه على غلاقه على غلاقه على على المان الله على المان ال

"Like the grief of separation which raineth on me, Think! hath any one ever seen SUCH fire as this?"—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"Thou becometh so changed from slight hunger,
That thou seizeth a beetle in thy avidity instead of a sloe."*—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

91. There are several words used in Pushto to denote similarity, but they are adverbs, and not declinable, viz.: غير ghundi, غير dod, غير tser, لكن laka or كا lakah and من المدن hasey or هي hasi, which generally go together, and may be translated, 'as,' 'so,' 'such,' etc., and the adjective خي makhaey (masc.), or خي makhaey (fem.), but the latter are rare. Examples:

"They who LIKE Majnūn through love lose their reputation,
Their names become renowned throughout the world."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

The rose shineth with one colour—thou art resplendent with a hundred."

-Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

- 92. The اسماي تفضيل و مبالغه asmā'e-tafṣīl wo mubālaghah, comparative and superlative degrees, are not expressed by any peculiar form of adjective: the superiority of one thing over another being expressed by the addition of various particles and adjectives.

"Look for excellence from the good, Ahmad Shāh! Evil consider LIGHTER THAN A FEATHER."

بیرام حکم پشماس و که ور دروم سرداسیا هم سهیلی تر ده چاپیره شهانه پوشاك دِ واغوندِ دوي واړ ور سره روح افزا تر کال نامیره

"Bahrām said unto Shamās, go you to her: All should dress themselves in royal robes; Sardāsī'ā too with her hand-maidens around her. And with them Rūḥ Afzā, More Lovely than the rose."—Bahrām Gūr.

94. A mere repetition of the positive is commonly used in forming the comparative; thus—

"He who murmureth at that which hath happened, Talketh GREAT NONSENSE: he beateth the froth bubbles on the water."

—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

95. In forming the superlative, such words as يورنه ttol, 'all,' عن had, 'boundary,' يورنه pahor-tah or پورنه por-tah, 'over,' 'above,' are used in addition to the particles employed to express the comparative; as يعنى له ټول لوي دي daghah lah ttolo lo'e daey, 'this is the biggest of all,' or, 'this is the greatest;' له حد زيات dā sarraey lah ttolo nah dder hośh-yār daey, 'this man is the eleverest of all.' Examples:

"Thy oppression, Oh beloved one! hath EXCEEDED ALL BOUNDS:

The waves of my tears are ever rolling from the ocean of my heart."

-Eabd-ul-Ham $\bar{\iota}$ d.

"The Hūmā on this account enjoyeth the GREATEST RANK OF ALL birds, That it consumeth bones, and injureth not the feathered race."—Gulistān.

"Man to all appearances is the most excellent of created things, and the dog the most vile; yet with the concurrence of the wise, a grateful dog is far superior to the man without gratitude."—Gulistān.

96. Many adjectives have a plural signification only; as,  $\underline{ttol}$ , 'all,' 'the whole,' etc. They take  $s(h\bar{a}-i-\underline{khaf\bar{\imath}})$  with feminine nouns, in place of which ( $\underline{-}$ ) fat-hah is commonly written. The following is the mode of conjugation:

(Mase.) قول ttol, 'all, 'the whole,' etc.

(Fem.) نولا ttola'h.

Nom.	ول or ټول نول نول tt ola'h, or tt ola.	all, the whole.

Acc.	وله or ټول tt ola'h, or tt ola,	all, or to all.
Voc.	, ai, or $nu$ tt olo و ټولو or ولُ	O all!
Abl.	lah tt olo ; or تولُ or له ټولو or تولُ ( lah tt olo nah له ټولو or ټولُ نه	from all.

"I once saw a MEAN SCOUNDREL of a fellow, who was speaking ill of a man of rank and respectability. I said to him: 'Oh master! if thou art unlucky, what fault is that of a more fortunate man?'"—Gulistān.

98. The particle of diminution affixed to a noun is also used to express endearment, as will be seen from the following extract.

"To me this is not death, neither is it life—than existence, the condition of the dead I look upon as preferable—through love I am become dry—from anguish I am consumed. Oh DEAR BROTHER Mīrū! I must see Durkhāna'ī."—Tale of Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

"When the prince spoke these words, The king and his family wept a great deal.

The king said, 'Oh my DEAR BOY! What time is this that thou hast made this declaration?'" —Saif-ul-Mulūk and Badrī Jamāl.

CHAPTER V.

THE PRONOUN.

.amīr ضمير

- 99. The Pushto pronouns are of five different classes—the personal, demonstrative, reflective or reciprocal, interrogative, and indefinite.
- 100. The language contains no peculiar form of relative and co-relative pronouns, but other pronouns are used instead; the explanations of which, as also examples, will be found in their proper places.
- 101. As the pronouns in declension admit of considerable changes, they require to be exhibited separately.
- 102. The personal pronouns, or ضماير منفصله ṣamā'īr-i-munfaṣilah, are عن عماير منفصله tah, and عنه haghah.
- 103. The 1st person is termed متكلم mutakallim, the 2nd سخاطب  $mu\underline{k}\underline{h}\bar{a}\underline{t}ab$  or مخاطب  $h\bar{a}zir$ , and the 3rd خائيب  $\underline{g}\underline{h}\bar{a}yib$ .
- 104. As it would far exceed the intended limits of the present work to give separate examples of each pronoun, both in the singular and plural number, I shall content myself by giving a specimen, either inflected or otherwise, as occasion may require; the whole of the changes for person and case, gender and number, can be seen at a glance from the following declensions.
- 105. The first personal pronoun s; zah is not subject to any change for gender, and is thus declined:

1st Person s; zah, 'I.' SINGULAR. Nom. s; zah, I. Gen. La dz'mā, mine, of me. or ما, یا, مت له mā tah, larah, lah; or Dat. to me. etc. و ما وته or من ما وته na mā tah; or, na mā natah, etc. Acc. L. mā. me, or to me. Abl. i la d or la d lah mā, or lah mā nah, from me. Act. L. mā. by me.

PLURAL.

The following are examples of the preceding:

"I seek assistance from thee oh God! grant unto me thy grace! If with my lot thou grantest me thy grace, thou wilt redeem me from the flames."—Malhzan Afghānī.

106. The uninflected form of this pronoun is sometimes used for the dative, the pronominal affix (described at paragraph 135) with the verb, also marking the objective case. The following is an example:

"The care and anguish which I suffer on account of my beloved, hath reduced ME to skin and bone, Like as the tree becometh in the autumn without leaves."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"Give you information to our spiritual guide, which is Pīr Ṣāleḥ, that he should assist us; and if he does not do this, we are tired and disgusted with his discipleship."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

The following quotation contains examples of several pronouns:

په شعبي كښي هسي دي راوړي د جنت يوه طفه به د دوغښ يو طفي ته هسي وائي موږ ستاس په تعليم په نصيحت سره داخل شوؤ په جنت كښي څه سبب د بد بختي وه چه داخل شوي په دوغښ كښي دوي به هسي ور ته وائي موږ امر د نيكي كاؤه عالم ته ول موږ پر و لاړ نوو له بدي به موږ تر پرهيز نوو

* Live, or with as it is also written, is the Eastern or Peshāwerī form of the first person plural, and the Western dialect. I have already explained at page 3 that some tribes change the letters — for L, and L for , and rice versa.

In the Shaæbī it is thus stated: "A party of people in Paradise will thus say to another party in Hell—'Through Your instruction and exhortations we have entered into Heaven. By what evil destiny was it that you entered into Hell?' These will thus answer them: 'We gave good counsel to the world, but we did not act up to it ourselves. We interdicted others from evil, but we did not abstain from it ourselves.'"— $Fam\bar{a}'\bar{\imath}d-u\underline{sh}-\underline{Sh}ar\bar{\imath}'aa'h$ .

"Oh Arab! I fear thou wilt not arrive at Mekka, for the road that Thou followest leadeth to Turkistān."—Gulistān.

108. In old writings, the dative particle is often written with an extra , thus: وقه , of which the following is an example.*

"Every morning and evening I offer up a prayer for thee:
Wherefore treatest thou me with contempt and abuse?"—Raḥmān.

This form of the dative is also used with nouns; and it may also be translated-'for,' 'for the sake of,' etc. See Chap. III.

"Before the time of the Prophet, this (woman) was married to Ætīk bin Æāmir, and she had a daughter by him: неп name was Hinda'h.—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

110. The feminine form of this pronoun, of which the example just given is a specimen, is also written with a  $\varphi$  instead of  $(\neg)$ , thus:

"The mother of the Faithful said thus to her, 'Always remember death; by means of it meekness and gentleness of heart is produced.' The counsel of Lady Æā-īsha'h took effect on that woman, and she acted up to it."— $Faw\bar{a}'\bar{\imath}d-u\underline{s}h-\underline{S}har\bar{\imath}'aa'h$ .

111. The singular nominative is also used for the plural, but the inflected plural form is occasionally adopted; as,

"The Prophet said thus unto him—'THEY are my vicars who act up to the rules and institutions of my orthodox faith."—Favā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"After that he sat down beneath the couch, and did not draw his breath until such time as they had consummated their pleasure, and the black flag of night became inverted."

-Kalīlah wo Damnah.

112. This pronoun is also used as the remote demonstrative, or اسم اشاره ism-i-ishāra'h, and is declined in a similar manner, as will be seen from the following examples:

"Whatever kind of seed thou sowest, тнат wilt thou reap:
Every tree beareth each its own peculiar fruit."— Eabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"No one in the whole course of his lifetime will have experienced Those sorrows which my beloved every hour inflicts upon me."

—Bahrām Gūr.

114. هاي  $h\bar{a}yah$ , هاي  $h\bar{a}-ya$ , is another, although less common, form of the proximate demonstrative pronoun, and more emphatic in its signification than the former; but it is more generally used by the Western than the Eastern Afghāns. It is not subject to change for gender or number, but rejects the final letter in the oblique cases. The following is the mode of declension:

هر چا ور ته وُ ويل اي ناداني كم عقلي اوښ له تا سره څه مناسبت لري او ته له اوښه سره څه مشابهت لري هغي ور ته وُ ويل چه چپ شئي كه حاسدان خپل غرض دپاره وُ وائي چه يو اوښ مشابهت لري هغي ور ته وُ ويل چه چپ شري كه حاسدان خپل غرض دپاره وُ وائي چه يو اوښ هما دَ خلاصولو غم دي

"Everyone said unto her, 'Oh thou foolish one of little wisdom! what resemblance beareth a camel to thee? and what similitude existeth between thee and a camel?' She said unto them, 'Be silent! for if the envious, for their own designs, should say, "THIS is a camel," and I should in consequence be seized, to whom is the concern and trouble for my release?"—Gulistān.

115. The remote demonstratives are  $\omega_{\omega}$  daey for the masculine, and  $\omega$  dā for the feminine. The latter, it will be noticed, is the same as one of the proximate demonstratives before described; but the difference is that the former is used for both genders, whilst the remote form is used only for the feminine gender. The personal pronouns of the third person, as already noticed at paragraph 112, are also used as remote demonstrative pronouns,\* and vice versā.

دي daey, or ک  $d\bar{a}$ , 'that' (persons or things).

Nom. Is or  $\[ \] \]$  or  $\[ \] \]$  daey, or  $\[ d au, \]$  or  $\[ \] \]$  or  $\[ \] \]$  or  $\[ \] \]$  or  $\[ \] \]$  da dah, or da dey, or lah; or  $\[ \] \]$  dor so, to race or so dah, or dey tah, larah, or lah; or  $\[ \] \]$  to that.

* These forms of the demonstrative— o, to, and o, are apt to be used indiscriminately in conversation, particularly by the Eastern Afghāns. Those of the West conform more to the written form of the language in this particular.

Acc. ادی or دی daey, or da, those, or to those. دى or دى الله lah dah, or dey; or Abl. from that. نى or عى ما lah dah, or dey nah, Act. دى or so dah, or dey, by that. PLUBAL. But the world entertaineth suspicions against me."—Bahrām Gūr.

116. The first letter of the demonstrative is sometimes lost by elision, thus:

دَ ناسوت په وهم ورک شو عندلیب زد غه کال یم چه د میني په بهار ځي

"The nightingale became lost in the imagination of humanity:
I am that rose which roameth about in the spring time of love."

—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

117. The reflective or reciprocal pronoun نمير مشترک (zamīr-i-mushtarak) خپل khpul is applicable to all three persons. It is placed before the verb in the sentence, and must refer to the agent or nominative case either expressed or understood, whatever it may be. The changes to which it is subject for gender and by inflection will be seen in the following declension:

(M.) خيل khpul, or (F.) خيل khpula'h, 'myself, thyself, my own,' etc.

The following are examples of this pronoun:

"In the year one thousand and forty I relate, this occurrence,

That on the people of Dakhan and Gujerāt such tyranny and oppression is seen.

In the whole of MY life, since I could distinguish good from evil;

I never beheld after this fashion massacre with stones."—Mīrzā Khān, Ansārī.

The inflected form of the feminine may be written خپل khpuli.

"The just claim which a wife has over her husband is this, that he should show proper love and affection towards his wife's brothers, her mother and father."

-Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"Afterwards Durkhāna'ī said to him, 'I have a request to make: pray give ear to it.' Adam Khān answered, 'Whatever the command may be I agree to it with all my heart.' She then related to him HER OWN sorrows in the following manner."

—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

119. When no agent is expressed this pronoun denotes individuality and reciprocity, or may refer to either of the three persons, which is only discoverable by something that has preceded it, or comes after; as it would be in the sentence دا خيل مال دى.

"Whoever maketh a prostration before a tomb, or wisheth for anything from the defunct; and he considereth the fulfilment of HIS wish to have been accomplished by means of the deceased, there is danger of blasphemy."—Favā'īd-ush Sharī'æa'h.

"Concerning this my own hard fate,

To whom shall I tell my sorrows? from whom seek redress?"

-Laylā and Majnūn.

"Those who show friendliness towards thee are not thy friends:

The whole set of them are scorpions or serpents!

The whole of the sons are the plague and chagrin of their own father!

The daughters are all leeches—blood-suckers of their mother's brother!

Whether are they thy kinsfolk, or whether thy brother,

They are all for THEIR OWN selves, their OWN profit, their OWN house."

 $-\underline{Kh}\bar{u}\underline{sh}\underline{h}\bar{a}l\ \underline{Kh}\bar{a}n,\ \underline{Kh}a\underline{tt}ak.$

"Like as thou of THINE OWN ACCORD behaveth towards THINE OWNSELF;

No one ever acteth towards an enemy with such iniquity and injustice."

-Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

120. The interrogative pronouns, اسماي استفهام ( $asm\bar{u}'e$ -i- $istifh\bar{u}m$ ), are خوک خود kom, and کمه kam or کمه kama'h.

is applied to persons and rarely to inanimate objects. It is used both for the singular and plural, and masculine and feminine, and is thus declined:

غوك tsok, 'who? which? what?' tsok, څوک who? which? what? Nom. ے ن da chā, of whom? which? what? Gen. to whom? which? what? Dat. خوک tsok, whom? which? what? Acc. ا من الله عن Abl.  $\underline{cha},$ by whom? which? what? Act.

EXAMPLES.

That thou wouldst ask me, who art thou? and what?—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

121. This pronoun is also in common use as an indefinite, and is for the most part applied to persons, but in some instances to things also. Examples of its use with respect to persons are contained in the following extracts:

"If any one taketh courage in acting with uprightness, he will follow after it with affection and love."— $Ma\underline{kh}zan\ A\underline{fgh}\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

"Some persons say that the Yūsufzīs are a great people—they (certainly) eat victuals out of platters, and drink water from bowls."— $Adam \ \underline{Kh}\bar{a}n \ and \ Dur\underline{hh}\bar{a}na'\bar{\imath}$ .

122. The following couplet contains an example of its use with reference to things.

"There is one element of water, and one element of earth;
And SOME fruits are bitter, and some pleasant and sweet."

124. The pronoun & tsah is used both in an interrogative as well as in an indefinite sense. Its conjugation is as follows:

(Masc. and Fem.) & tsah, 'What?' or 'a, an, any,' etc.

SINGULAR AND PLURAL.

Example as the Indefinite, اسم مبيام ism-i-mubham:

125. غني dzini, or ذي غي zini or ذي غي zini, as it is sometimes written, is another form of the indefinite. It is applicable to things both animate and inanimate; it is not subject to any change in termination for gender; and is both singular and plural. It is declined as follows:

ون or څني dzinī, or dzini, ک څنو or ک څنو d*a dzino*, Nom. some, any, a few, etc. Gen. of some, any, a few, etc. عنو or څن ته , لرد , له dzino tah, larah, lah ; or etc. و څنو or څن ته . etc. غنو or څن ته etc. څن و مخنو or څنو or څنو وته . etc. Dat. to some, any, etc. مني or څني  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$ , or  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$ , or  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$ , or  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$ , or  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$  is  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$  is  $\frac{dz}{a}in\bar{\imath}$  is Acc. some, or to some, etc. Abl. from some, any, etc. ئى or غن dzino, Act. by some, any, a few, etc.

EXAMPLES

From its beginning the horseman is mounted, the footman on foot;

And man himself originally is of one race and origin;

126. Several pronouns admit of composition; thus, هر څوک har-tsok, 'whoever,' هر شوک har-tsok, 'whatever,' هر شوه har-tsah, 'whatever,' هر يو har-yow, 'every one,' کمبو kam-yow, 'which one,' or 'whichever,' etc. They are subject to the same rules of inflection and change in termination for gender as the pronouns from which they are derived. کمبو kam-yow is declined in the following manner:

kam-yow (Mase.), or کمه یوه kama'h-yowa'h (Fem.), 'Which one?'

کمه یو or کمه یو kam-yon, or kama'h-yona'h, Nom. which one. وي من or کم يوي da kam-yona; da kamey-yoney, Gen. of which one. or کم یو ته , لره , kam-yona tah, larah, lah; or Dat. to which one. kam-yow, or kama'h-yowa'h, Acc. which one, etc. كم يو نه d or غ م يو نه lah kam-yona, or lah kam-yona nah, from which الله كمي يوي al lah kamey-yowey, or lah kamey-yowey nah, ) one. kam-yona, or kamey-yoney, کم یو وی Act. by which one.

خه  $\underline{tsah}$  already explained, there being no connection between them. The co-relative, جواب  $jaw\bar{a}b$ -i-maw, is supplied by the demonstrative pronouns, as will be seen from the examples.

128. amay either precede or follow after its substantive:

"They who have been well anointed with the ashes of humility,
The mirror of Their hearts becometh clear and bright."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

SINCE from the world, good fortune is only to be obtained by degrees."

-Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

129. In addition to the regular form of the personal pronouns already explained and illustrated, there are three other forms which require a lengthened explanation.

The first form of these pronouns is used with all past tenses of the active voice, to denote the agent in a sentence; but they have no meanings separate from the verbs. With any other than active or transitive verbs they point out the object, or the possessive case, and have but these two inflections from the nominative. They are not affected by gender, and may be prefixed or inserted.

"Ākhūnd Darwezah relates—' I was also going in company with the Yūsufzīs towards the head of the Suwāt valley; and in the same place, on the night in question, such quantities of hail and rain fell, that up to the dawn of morning we entertained no hope of our lives.'"—

Afzal Khān; Tārīkh-i-Muraṣṣaæ.

" $\bar{A}kh\bar{u}nd$  Darwezah states, 'I said unto them, this book was a blessing unto you, and you have acted very improperly in this, inasmuch that you have taken it from those people forcibly, and you have sent it unto him: by this unfortunate mishap you will become ruined."—

Afzal  $\underline{Kh}\bar{a}n$ .

131. These affixes and prefixes being one of the difficulties of Pushto, the examples of each person given above were necessary, and will be required for those which follow.

132. The second form of pronoun, or pronominal dative prefix, as it may be termed, is alone used to point out the object in a sentence. It is used with all verbs; but, like the preceding, has no independent meaning, and is not subject to change in termination for gender: it is both singular and plural.

zamā'īr-i-muttasila'h, are used فماير متصله * zamā'īr-i-muttasila'h in forming the tenses of intransitive and substantive verbs, and, with the exception of the six past tenses, for those of verbs transitive also. They are inseparable from the verbs, and have no independent signification. The regular personal pronouns may also be prefixed to the verbs with which they are used, but are not absolutely required, and not generally adopted. On reference to the conjugations, the manner in which these affixes are used with the different tenses and persons will be seen at They are as follow: a glance.

THIRD FORM.

SINGULAR.		PLURAL.
1st person,	am,	I.	į ū,	we.
2nd ,,	ey,	thou.	,a'aī ئى	ye or you.
3rd ,,	، آ ي	he, she, it, or	•• /	they.

The following are examples:

"If thou fallest from the precipice of love, thou wilt lose thy teeth, Oh thou who gnashest thy teeth at me by way of admonition!"

-Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

" For him whom the black DEMON of love strikes,

There is no health or cure through the charms or incantations of the world."

- Æabd-ul- Hamīd.

"When I and my beloved together make a computation of our sorrows, She is astonished with her lover, and I am filled with amazement at mine."

* There is great similarity between these pronouns and those of the Arabic and Persian languages. In Sindhī also there is searcely a sentence spoken in which they are not used with verbs, nouns, and prepositions.

"On this Mīr Māmī set out in company with those horsemen; and when he had gone a short distance, he said to them—'Make You haste that You may reach the Force quickly."

—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

"When will THEY who taste of the wine-coloured lips of the fair, Set their hearts on the juice of the grape?"—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

136. There are three prepositions used in Pushto requiring explanation here, which are used as demonstrative pronouns. They are تر tar and پر par, which affix a zer (ب); and v nā or w nah, which prefix تر tey or ن ti in the oblique cases. They are used both for things animate and inanimate, are both singular and plural, and are not subject to any change for gender. The following are examples:

"On every sensible adult believer, to fast is a divine command and a duty. Like the repayment of a debt it is necessary and incumbent on HIM. If any one repudiates fasting, all acts from HIM are entirely vain, and HE will become an infidel."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"Gūl Nāzey said, 'This is that same Adam Кhān From whom Durkhāna'ī has been carried off."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

"Listen, oh true believers—In our day the calamities produced by the tongue are manifold, since blasphemous words are uttered from it."— $Ma\underline{kh}zan\ Af\underline{gh}\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

"Oh bird of the dawn! learn thou love from the moth!

That consumed one's life went, but no sound escaped from him."

-Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"I said in my mind, when I reach the rose tree, I will fill my skirt with roses from it, as a present for those whom I love."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

CHAPTER VI.

THE VERB.

.Fiæl فعل

- 137. A verb is a word which affirms or asserts; as وائيي 'speaks,' وائيي 'eats.' It may also of itself constitute a sentence, and unless it be expressed or understood, no sentence is complete.*
- 138. Verbs are of two kinds—primitive and derivative—which may again be divided into six classes, the رابط الزماني, or substantive; neuter or intransitive; active or transitive, in which also are comprised causals; the derivative, or متعدي; and the passive, or نعل مشتق.
- 139. Some verbs have both an active and a neuter signification; as سُول to burn.'

Give unto her information respecting my name.

Say, that consumed in the fire of thy love,

Prince Bahrām hath again returned from Rūm.—Bahrām Gūr.

"Majuūn at that time acquired the dominion of love,

When in the fire of affection he consumed all his worldly wealth."

-Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

140. The active voice may be obtained from some intransitives, by changing the ل and the يدل of the infinitive into ول ; as بليدل 'to take fire,' بليدل 'to set on fire;' سريدل 'to become cool,' سريدل 'to make cool ;' سريدل 'to swing,' نتكيدل 'to swing,' نتكيدل 'to make swing.' Example:

"As much as thou art able, PAIN not the heart of any one; Since there may be very many thorns in this path.

* As the student, now that we have advanced so far, may be supposed to have thoroughly mastered the sounds of the letters, vowels, and orthographical marks, there will be no necessity for giving the pronunciation of every word in the Roman character, and, in ease of doubt, the Dictionary can be easily referred to.

Give assistance unto the poor and indigent in their affairs; Since thou hast many matters in this world to be brought to conclusion."

- Gulistān.

141. The causal verb, also termed متعدي mutawaddī, may be formed from intransitives and transitives, by adding ل in place of ل or يدل ; thus زغليدل 'to run,' خندول 'to cause to run;' خندول 'to cause to run;' خندول 'to cause to laugh;' خندول 'to lament,' خندول "to lament," خندول "to lament," Example:

"If thou cause one to laugh, or cause one to lament, thou art the cause of all: Of my own accord I do not make merry, neither do I mourn nor bewail."

-Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

142. The derivative verb, or فعل مشتق fiæl-i-mushtakk, may be formed from nouns, adjectives, or pronouns, either by alone adding the sign of the infinitive, as 'understanding,' پوهندل 'to understand;' وچ 'dry,' پوهندل 'to become dry,' to make dry;' or by shortening the long vowel of the word, as وچول 'to make bright;' خپول 'a brink or side,' غرول 'to put aside;' خپل 'self, myself;' خپلول 'to make one's own,' 'to gain the affections of.' The following is an example:

"It is necessary to practice every disguise to please the beloved:

To gain the affections of the fair, dependeth on art and skill."

— Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

- 143. Pushto also contains a sort of compound verb, which may be divided into two classes—nominals and intensitives. The former are formed by the mere subjoining of a verb regularly conjugated to a noun or adjective; as اوده 'sleep,' اوده 'to sleep;' وري 'hunger,' وري کيدل 'to sleep;' جنگ کول 'to fight.' These verbs being very commonly used, need no example, there being scarcely a sentence without one.
- 144. Intensitives are obtained by adding or prefixing to a regularly conjugated verb two adjectives or an adverb; thus:

"The arrows of thy eyelashes have pierced me in the breast: Verily they have passed right through unto my heart."

—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

* This method of using a letter instead of a vowel point, in discrete, is in accordance with the orthographical system of the Zend language. See Introduction, page 22.

"Sometimes a man may be cheerful and happy;
At times, through grief, TROUBLED and DISTRESSED."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

145. The passive voice is formed by the addition of the different tenses of the substantive or auxiliary verbs شول and شول ' to be or become,' to the past participle or imperfect tense of a transitive verb, both of which are subject to the same changes in termination for gender as other verbs, to agree with the governing noun in the sentence. Examples:

"When the rose-tree is viewed without the beloved being at one's side,

The eye-sight merely falleth on a place of thorns and brambles."—Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

" By the time the treacle is вкоиснт from Irāķ,* the snake-bitten person is dead."—Gulistān.

- 146. It will be necessary now to show the inflections of the different auxiliaries, which are the models for the variations of the persons, and in forming the definite tenses of the verbs.
- 147. The following auxiliary or substantive verb, called the رابط الزماني, rābiṭ-uz-zamānī) is ناقص (nāḥiṣ) or imperfect, and has no known infinitive. It is very easy, and should be carefully committed to memory. Want of space will compel me to content myself with a single example of each tense in the conjugations of the verbs, unless some peculiarity requires to be more fully explained.

'To be or become.'—Infinitive unknown.

EXAMPLES.

ساقي جام د ميو راوړه غرق د اوښيو په درياب يم

"Cupbearer! bring the bowl of wine: I AM overwhelmed in the ocean of grief."

"Since these crooked and left-handed revolutions are occasioned by fate; Mount Caucasus itself should not coquet about its own weight."—Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

The following form of the 2nd person plural is to be found in ancient writings, but it is not commonly used. It, as well as شُنه, is in all probability derived from an obsolete infinitive ستال or ستال.

"You, oh faithful! Are the servants of the Most High. God liveth! death affects him not! keep firmly the tenets of your faith, oh people of God!"—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h. and دي are sometimes used together, but the latter seems to be merely added by way of emphasis. The following is an example:

"With the glance of her dark-grey eye she enchants and charms in this manner— There is no one eye equal to it in Hind, not another in Bengāla'h.—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

This tense with the prefix & is often used as the Conditional or Optative tense, of which examples will be found in their proper places.

The following example shows both the masculine and feminine form of this tense, and both methods of writing the third person masculine, as above given.

"There was a chief of the Yūsufzīs'—a Ṭahmūraṣ* in wealth—who was ycleped Ṭā'ous Khān. There was also a daughter of this chieftain, named Durkhān,* and there was no equal to her in beauty."—Story of Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

* The third Persian King of the Pishdadian dynasty, said to have been the founder of Babylon, Nineveh, etc., and the discoverer of fire. He reigned about 830 B.c., although some carry him centuries beyond.

"There was a learned man who was proficient in all the sciences contained in as many books as required four hundred chests to hold them.—Fanā'īd-ush-Shari'æa'h.

The future tense of this auxiliary shows the very irregular and imperfect nature of many of the Afghan verbs. The 1st and 2nd persons are formed by prefixing the particle at to the present, and the 3rd person by prefixing it to the again has no 1st or 2nd persons. In the conjugations of all other verbs, the 2nd future tense is formed from the agrist.

به يَم we shall or will be. مُورِ or مُنكا به يؤ we shall or will be. وتاس به ئي we shall or will be. وتاس به ئي you shall or will be. (W.)+ تاس به ياست (W.)+ تاس به ياست (W.)+ كنه به وي or به وين they shall or will be.

EXAMPLES.

"I have such confidence in the truth of my own sighs,

That after death even, I SHALL still BE a companion of the fair."

"Prince Bahrām WILL certainly BE present at that place,

That the breeze may bring him perfume from the door of his beloved."

-Bahrām Gūr.

"In the space of thirty years there will be stability, (during this time) there WILL not BE a man—not even an ant to eat up the grain."—Makhaan Afghānī.

The agrist or future indefinite tense of this auxiliary, as previously stated, has but one form for all three persons. It is also used in forming the doubtful past tenses of other verbs, as will be seen from the different conjugations.

EXAMPLE.

"As long as I мау наче hands, or as long as I мау ве possessed of strength, I will devote my life and my existence to my beloved."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

THE IMPERFECT TENSE, AS THE CONDITIONAL OR OPTATIVE. SINGULAR.

This tense implies continuity, and, with a conditional conjunction or adverb of wishing, expressed or understood, is used as the Conditional or Optative, which is its most general form. Examples:

"The utility of the ocean would be great, were there no apprehension of the waves;

The intimacy of the rose would be considerable, were there no fear of the thorn."

—Gulistān

It is also frequently used after interjections, as in the following couplet:

"Alas! that there were no such thing in the world as anxiety on account of absence— That the heart were not overwhelmed in the ocean of separation."

The following is an example of the simple past tense, with the prefixed particle  $\omega$  used in a hypothetical sense,\* as referred to at page 53.

"Oh joy of thy father's heart; if thou hadst been asleep, IT WOULD BE far better, than that thou hadst commenced searching after the defects of others."—Gulistān.

There is no imperative mood of this auxiliary, and that of 'to remain,' etc., is used for it.

148. The following, as well as the preceding verb, is also used generally to

\* Instead of giving both forms of feminine words ending in  $(y\bar{u}-i-majh\bar{u}l)$  or (-) (kasra'h), I have generally adopted the latter throughout this work by way of distinction, and as it is—as I have already noticed at paragraph 63 and note + page 10—most generally used.

TRANSITIVE AND INTRANSITIVE VERBS.

afæaāl-i-lāzimī no mutaæaddī. افعال لازمي و متعدي

INFINITIVE.

150. All infinitives in the Pushto language end in يكل الله و edal, or يكل wul; as, يكل شاربل shārbal, 'to churn,' كويدل gaddedal, 'to mix,' آرويدل ārwedal, 'to hear,' قردول tawdawul, 'to make hot,' ete.

Verbs which merely take  $\mathcal{J}$  in forming the infinitive are both transitive and intransitive; those which take  $\mathcal{L}$  are, without exception, intransitives; † and those ending in  $\mathcal{L}$ ; are all transitives.

The infinitive of verbs is also used as the حاصل مصدر (hāṣil-i-maṣdar) or verbal noun; as in the following examples:

"Like the rose, as much as thou concealest it, so much its perfume increaseth;
In the same manner, the anguish of love from ENDURANCE, becometh overpowering."

-Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

"This speech was exceedingly acceptable to the king, and that night he came to his house."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

"In the first place, what use is it PAINING the heart with love?

Again, of what advantage is TURNING BACK from it at a slight obstacle?"

—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

151. There are in the Pushto language no less than thirty-seven classes of verbs, the whole of which vary in some way or other in the formation of the different inflections.* Of this number thirteen are intransitive, and twenty-four transitive.

Five of the thirteen classes of intransitives are imperfect; and, of the transitives, nineteen classes contain perfect and imperfect verbs; and the remaining classes are entirely imperfect.

INTRANSITIVES.

CLASS I.

152. Changes the last radical letter, after dropping the  $\bigcup$  of the infinitive, for another letter, in the present tenses and the imperative mood, but retains it in the past tenses and the past participle; as, پوهيدل poh-edal, 'to know,' آلوتل  $\bar{a}lwatal$ , 'to fly,' نيستل  $n'\underline{k}hatal$ , or  $n'\underline{k}hatal$ , or  $n'\underline{k}hatal$ , 'to be entrapped,'  $b'\underline{k}hatal$ , 'to fall.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfeet.	Past.	Past Part.
پوهيدل	پوهي ړي	ۇ پوھى <sub>دې</sub> ي	ۇ پوھىرد	پوهيده	ۇ پوھىدە +	پوهيدلي
آلوتل	آلوزي	والوزي	والوزه	آلوت	والوت	آلوتلئي
نښتل	نښلي	ۇ نىپىلىي	ۇ نىپىلە	نښت	ۇ نښت	نښتي
لويدل	لويګېي	ا ۇ لويكىي	ۇ لويكە	لويده	ۇ لويدە	لويدلتي

* There appear to be two eras, if I may so term it, in the Pushto language. The first, of words which are evidently pure Afghān, and probably those used by the Afghānah, when they first settled in their present country. The second, when Arabic, Persian, and Sanserit became engrafted on the original stock. This is particularly apparent with regard to the conjugations of the verbs.

CLASS II.

153. Rejects the two last radical letters in the present and future tenses and the imperative mood, and retains them in the past tenses and past participle; as, غافيدل z'ghaledal, 'to run,' غافيدل ½ tsātsedal, 'to leak or drop.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
زغليدل	زغلِي	ۇ زغلىي	ۇ زغلە	زغليده	ۇ زغلىدە	زغليدلي
څاڅيدل	څاڅي	ۇ څاڅىي ا		څاڅيدَ	ۇ څاڅىدَ	څاڅیدلي
			CLASS III.

154. Rejects the sign of the infinitive and the three last radical letters in the present and future tenses and imperative, but retains them in the past tenses and past participle; as  $k'khen\bar{a}stal$ , or  $k'\underline{s}hen\bar{a}stal$ , 'to sit.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
كښيناستل	كښينږي	كښيني	كښينه	كښيناست	كښيناست	كښيناستلي
			CLASS IV.

155. Drops the last radical letter and loses the long vowel by elision, in the present, future, and imperative, but retains it in the past; as چاودل ehāw-dal, 'to split.'

Infinitive.	Present	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
چاودل	چ وي	ۇ چوي	ۇ چوھ	چاود	ۇ چاود	چاودلئي ا
		•	CLASS V.

156. Changes the last radical letter for two others in the present, future, and imperative, similar to Class XIX of transitives; and merely rejects the ن of the infinitive for the past; as ختل khatal, 'to ascend.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
ختل	خيژي	ۇ خي ژي	ۇ خىۋد	خوت	ۇ خوت	ختلي
			CLASS VI.

157. Merely rejects the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive throughout; as  $m'\underline{rral}$ , 'to die.'\* The past participle is shortened. In the present, agrist, and imperative, the  $\mathcal{J}$  of this verb is changed to  $\mathcal{J}$ .

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
مترل	، مري	ۇ مىرى	ۇ مىرد	• کُھ	ۇ مىر	- F

\* This, as well as many other verbs, often retains the  $\bigcup$  of the infinitive in all the inflections, merely affixing, inserting, or prefixing the necessary pronouns and particles to form the various tenses. The past participle may be considered an adjective.

CLASS VII.

158. The verbs of this class take a letter after the last radical letter in the present, future, and imperative, and reject both of them in the past; as wal, 'to burn.'

159. The verbs of this and the following classes of the intransitives are imperfect. They change the last radical letter for another, like Class I., in the present tense, and retain it in the imperfect and the past. The auxiliary مرافع على shwal, 'to become,' is required in forming the other tenses of the verb with which the adjective, or shortened past participle is used; as باتيدل mātedal, 'to break,' پاتيدل pātedal, 'to remain,' etc.

160. The infinitive زغاستل و z'ghākhtal, or زغاستل z'ghāstal, 'to run,' which is a specimen of this class of verbs, has no present, aorist, or future tense; but the past and imperfect tenses and past participle are formed in the same manner as those of other verbs, by merely rejecting the J of the infinitive, and affixing and prefixing the different pronouns and particles. The other tenses appear to belong to another infinitive, at present obsolete.

161. This class, of which مروبيل drūmal, 'to go,' is an example, is similar to Class VI. as far as it goes; but it is just the reverse of the preceding, having a present, future, and imperative, but no past tenses or past participle, which are taken from other imperfect infinitives.

162. لايل lārral, 'to go or depart,' is another of the imperfect verbs. It has merely an infinitive mood and a past tense. By using the agrist and imperfect of the auxiliary شُول shwal, 'to become,' with its past tense, the aorist and imperative are formed. The other tenses are wanting.

163. تلل t'lal, ' to go,' is the only verb of this class, and has only an infinitive, and an imperfect tense, formed by rejecting the ل of the infinitive; as من , or by rejecting the radical ل altogether, as من , and ب are also used with it. It has a regular past participle.

164. راغلل rāghlal, 'to come,' is the only verb of this class, and has merely a past tense and past participle. The pure infinitive was doubtless غلل, to which the pronouns referred to in the former class have been added, but without them it conveys no meaning. It differs from the preceding inasmuch as it adds to the imperfect tense of قلل to form its own imperfect tense, and has a regular past. In other respects it is similar.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
راغلل	راڅيي	راشي	راڅه	راته	راغي	راغللي ٥٢ راغلي

The whole of these imperfect verbs use the tenses of others to supply the want of their own, as will be seen from the conjugations. The latter have been marked by a dash over them.

TRANSITIVES.

CLASS I.

165. The verbs of this class are the most numerous in the language. They reject the J of the infinitive for the present, future, and imperative, and lengthen the first vowel from (ع) to I for the past tenses. The past participle is regular; as كرزول 'tarral, 'to bind,' وهل 'wahal, 'to strike,' كرزول 'garzawul, 'to turn.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
ترل	تړي	ۇ تېرىي	ۇ تىرە	تارَ	ۇ تاير	ترلي

CLASS II.

166. The verbs of this class are also very numerous, but are irregular. In forming the present tense and imperative mood, they reject the J of the infinitive, and sometimes form the latter by affixing the imperative of خرار krral, 'to do,' to the shortened past participle. The aorist, future, and past tenses are alone formed by the aid of the shortened past participle prefixed to the same tenses of خناول. The middle vowel of the root is lengthened from (L) to \ for the imperfect tense; as خنبول khakhawul, or khakhawul, 'to bury.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
خښول	خښوي	خښ کړي	خىنى كړى	خښاؤد	خښ کړ	خښ کَړي
			CLASS III.

167. Changes the two last radical letters of the root for two others in the present, future, and imperative; as غوښتل in غوښتل in غوښتل ghokhtal, or ghośhtal, 'to desire;' غوښتل in غوښتل in غوښتل for ست for ست skakhtal, 'to clothe;' سکښتل in غوښتل in غوښتل in غوښتل in پريښول in ځد for بېر و for بېريښول in ځد for بېريښول in ځد for بېرونېول in ځد for بېرونېول in ځوښتول.

			CLASS IV.

168. The verbs of this class, after dropping the ل of the infinitive, reject the two last radical letters for another letter, in the present, future, and imperative; as م for م in موندل mundal, 'to find;' ست for ل أ wastal, 'to read;' and تخستل akhistal, 'to seize;' and retain them in the past tenses.

CLASS V.

169. These verbs do not take the prefixed  $\sharp$ , and form all the tenses and the imperative by the mere rejection of the  $\cup$  of the infinitive, the present tenses taking the affixed, and the past the prefixed pronouns; as  $b\vec{a}'e\text{-}lal$ , 'to lose at play.'

			CLASS VII.

171. Lengthens the first syllable in all the inflexions in the same manner as the preceding, but with this exception, that it changes ( $\leq$ ) into , for the present and future tenses and the imperative mood, and ( $\leq$ ) into ! for the past; as balal, 'to call.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
بلل	بولِي	ۇ بولىي	ۇ بولە	باله	ۇ بالە	بَللني
			CLASS VIII.

172. After dropping the من of the infinitive, changes the last radical letter for another in the present, future, and imperative; as من for من in wajz-lal or وجلل wajz-lal, 'to kill.' The radical letter is retained in the past tenses, and the first vowel lengthened from (ے) to 1.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
وثرلل	وژنبي	ۇ وژنېي	ۇ وژنە	واثره	ۇ واژە	وژلىي
			CLASS IX.

173. The verbs of this class are irregular, as are all the infinitives ending in , which reject the prefixed ;, the sign of the past tense. They change the last radical letter for another in the present, future, and imperative; as for in prā-natal, 'to unloose;' but retain it in the past. By rejecting the prefixed ; there is no difference between the past and the imperfect in the mode of writing. See page 87, para. 220.

پرانتل	پرانځي	پران ث ي	پرانځه	پرانت	پرانت	پرانتني

174. After dropping the sign of the infinitive, rejects the three last letters of the root for another, in the formation of the present, future, and imperative, and retains them in the past tenses; as يشتل wishtal, 'to discharge.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
ويشتل	ۇلىي	ۇ ۇلىي	ۇ ۋائە	ويشت	ۇ وِيشت	ويشتلتي

CLASS XI.

175. The verbs of this class reject the two last radical letters in the present and imperative, but retain them in the past and past participle; as پوښتيدل p $\bar{n}\underline{k}\underline{h}t$ -edal or  $p\bar{u}\underline{s}\underline{h}t$ -edal, 'to ask,' پيرودل p $\bar{r}$ raw-dal, 'to purchase,' آرويدل 'to hear.'

آرويدل	آروي	واروي	واروه	آرويدَ	وارويدَ	آرويدلتي ا

CLASS XII.

176. Rejects the last radical letter of the root in the present, future, and imperative, but retains it in the past. The middle vowel is also lengthened from (ع) to \ for the past tenses: the past participle is regular; as بيژندل pejzandal, 'to know.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
پیژندل	پيژني	ۇ پيژنبي	ۇ پىۋنە	پيژاند	ۇ پىۋاند	پيژندلي

CLASS XIII.

177. Lengthens the first vowel from ( $\leq$ ) to \ for the present, future, and imperative, and uses the simple infinitive of the verb for all the inflexions of the imperfect and the past, with the addition of the prefixed; in all three persons, singular and plural; as  $\leq kh$  and al, 'to laugh.' The past participle is regular.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.

CLASS XV.

179. The verbs of this and the following classes are all imperfect.

The infinitive ييبّل yekhal or yeshal, 'to place,' is an example. It has no present, future, or imperative, but the imperfect tense is regularly formed. It is generally used with the two following infinitives, which are of the same meaning, and have no past tenses.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
بيښّل	ڔۜۮؠ	ر دي	ارده	ييښ	كيښو	ييښي

CLASS XVI.

180. کیرول kekhwal, 'to place,' is a specimen of this class. It has but one tense, which is used both for the imperfect and the past. کیرول kejz-dal, which again has no past tenses or past participle, is used with it to supply the tenses which the former infinitive requires.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfeet.	Past.	Past Part.

CLASS XVII.

181. يَشِوْل jz'dal, 'to place,' the example of this class, has no past tenses or past participle, and, as before mentioned, is used to supply the wants of بيشِل, which has no present, future, or imperative. The present tense is formed by merely rejecting the ل of the infinitive, and affixing the necessary pronouns. The imperative is formed in the same manner, but the past tenses are taken from كيشول and the past participle from ييشِل.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
رَدِل	ږدي	ږدي	رده	كيښو	كيښو	ييښي

CLASS XVIII.

ne of this class, is merely imperfect as regards the aorist and future tenses, which are taken from يوسل yo-sal when required. The imperative is formed by merely rejecting the ل of the infinitive, and the present by affixing the necessary pronouns. The past is formed by prefixing يوړل to the root, which is obtained from يوړل, an infinitive nearly obsolete.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.

183. بيول  $b\bar{\imath}$ -wul, 'to take or bear away,' and آښل  $\bar{a}\underline{k}\underline{h}al$ , or  $\bar{a}\underline{s}\underline{h}al$ , 'to knead,' are specimens of this class. They change the last radical letter for two others in the present tenses, and imperative mood, and retain it in the imperfect: the other tenses are wanting, but the past participle is regular.

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.

CLASS XX.

184. The infinitives of this class which prefix the postposition  $k\underline{\underline{k}\underline{k}\underline{h}\underline{e}\underline{y}}$  or  $k\underline{\underline{s}\underline{h}\underline{e}\underline{y}}$ , 'in,' etc., to another verb, reject the  $\underline{\underline{U}}$  of the infinitive in the present tenses and imperative mood, and lengthen the short vowel preceding the last characteristic letter from ( $\underline{\underline{U}}$ ) to  $\underline{\underline{U}}$  for the past; as  $\underline{\underline{U}}$  definitive, or  $\underline{\underline{k}\underline{s}\underline{h}\underline{e}\underline{n}\underline{a}\underline{w}\underline{u}\underline{l}$ , 'to cause or make to sit.' The past participle is regular.

ساتل	ساترِي	ۇ ساتىيى	ۇ ساتە	ساته	ۇ ساتە	ساتلي

CLASS XXII.

186. Rejects the last radical letter, and the sign of the infinitive for the present and imperative, and retains it in the past. The past participle is regular; as n'gharrdal, 'to swallow,' سيدل sparrdal, 'to undo or unravel.'

Infinitive.	Present.	Aorist.	Imperative.	Imperfect.	Past.	Past Part.
تغردل	نغري	ۇ نغړي	ۇ ئغړد	نُغرِد	ۇ ئغړد	نّغردي

CLASS XXIII.

187. The infinitive مَوْلُ swal, 'to burn,' which is a specimen of this class, is used both as a transitive and intransitive. The sign of the infinitive is dropped and an extra letter taken for the present tenses and imperative. The past tenses reject the extra letter, and are regular in their formation.

188. The infinitive کول kawul, 'to perform,' which comes under this class, is exceedingly irregular in the formation of the different tenses. The most regular form of the present is obtained by rejecting the علم and the last radical letter (of which there are but two) for the masculine singular. It is also written and عند for the third person, but the radical letter, lost in the third, is retained in the first and second. The past tenses are also irregular, and there is no change in termination for gender.

THE PARTICIPLES.

189. Pushto verbs admit of inflexion to form the participles, which may be termed imperfect or present, and perfect or past, as they notify whether the action of the verb be unfinished or complete.

These participles partake of the properties of the verb, the adjective, and the noun; and are intransitive or transitive according to the verbs from which they are derived.

The participles of intransitive and transitive verbs are formed according to the same rules.

190. The present or imperfect participle is formed from the infinitive in six different ways.

"The lover is not to be separated in any way whatsoever from the beloved, Whether his dwelling be sacked and pillaged, or filled with wealth and goods. Though one would give him the sovereignty of this world and the next, He would not accept it, for the beloved one is of great price:

Therefore he turneth not away, for TURNING BACK is the act of a fool."

-Ķāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

"Again: REPEATING is incumbent on thee in both of the first genuflexions; and shouldest thou repeat in the last, and neglect the first, thou art not devoid of sin."—Makhzan Afghānī.

191. II.—In the second form the J of the infinitive is dropped and replaced by s ( $h\bar{a}$ -i- $g\bar{a}hir$ ) or (L) (fat'ha'h), if masculine, and s ( $h\bar{a}$ -i-ha $f\bar{i}$ ) if feminine; as ناست 'to sit,' ناست 'to sit,' ناست 'sitting.'

The following are examples:—

"First: WASHING the face from the top of the forehead as far down as the bottom of the chin, is a precept in ablution; also washing that clear space which is between the ears and the cheek, is a duty."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"Thy mode of SITTING, oh sweetheart,

Is like the Perching of the falcon on the mountain top."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"Whenever one attends in a place of worship, for each footstep, both in coming and in going, twelve good actions will be written."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

192. III.—To form the third division, it is necessary to insert an 1 before the final consonant of the root, which in this class is generally ت, and add the same terminations, as in the preceding form; thus آلواته 'to fly,' آلواته 'flying;' to change' or 'turn round,' جاروتل 'changing' or 'turning round;' وتل 'to come out,' وتل 'coming out.' Examples:

"Behold! the fly and the bee are of one species, but their mode of flying is different; for the fly will fly to filthiness and impurity, whilst many seekers are satiated with the honey of the bee,"— $Ma\underline{kh}zan\ Afg\underline{h}\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

"Let Khizr* become the gatekeeper of that gate and wall, Through which thy coming in and going out may be."+—Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"My CHANGING from thy love and affection is false indeed:
Why should not my body become dust on this road?"—Eabd-ur-Rahmān.

"Alas, oh chief! when I look towards thee, death to me is an abyss, and this form I make a precipitation of into it."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

193. IV.—The fourth class is obtained by lengthening the vowel of the first letter from (ع) to 1 after cutting off the ل of the infinitive as usual, and affixing (ع) or s to the final consonant of the root; as ياست 'to draw forth' or 'eject,' ياسته or جاريستل 'drawing forth' or 'ejecting;' جاريستل 'to change,' 'alter,' or 'turn round,' ehanging,' 'altering,' 'turning round.' Example:

"At the time of making salutation (at prayer), TURNING the head to the right side and the left is desirable."—Favā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"Tenth: Knowing Muḥammad is a divine command, in this manner; that he is the Prophet of God, on whom we have placed our faith."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

194. V.—The present participles of the fifth class are obtained from intransitive infinitives, formed from adjectives by dropping the يدل of the infinitive and adding يدل; as كويدل 'to mix,' كويدل 'to fill,' دكوين 'filling.' They may also be obtained from pure transitives having ل as the sign of the infinitive; thus ترل 'to bind,' وكيدل 'to fill,' وكيدل 'filling.' These forms are rare, the former particularly so.

* The name of a prophet who, according to Oriental tradition, was Wuzīr to Kaikobād, king of Persia. He is said to have discovered and drank of the water of life, and that in consequence he will not die until the Day of Judgment.

+ من and نن واته may also be translated, exit and entrance. See Chapter VII., On the Derivation of Words.

"The ASSOCIATING (mixing) of the beloved with a rival is,
As if a person were to mix together purity and defilement."— Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

195. VI.—The sixth class, which consists of transitive and causal verbs, is formed by dropping the J of the infinitive and inserting I before the final letter of the root, to which ن ماتول نه is affixed; as ماتول 'to break' or 'rend,' ماتول 'breaking' or 'rending;' شکلاؤی 'kissing.' Example:

"Majnun one day beheld a dog in the desert, and caressed him a thousand times."

He kissed him on both eyes in various ways, and people became astonished with him for KISSING."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

- 196. The whole of these participles are capable of inflexion, in the same manner as nouns, in three different ways:
- 197. Those of the first form, ending in s ( $h\bar{u}$ -i- $k\underline{h}ufi$ ), such as خاروتنه 'turning away,' and ناسته 'sitting,' which are all feminine, come under the first variety of nouns of the 3rd Declension; those of the second, third, and fourth forms, terminating in s ( $h\bar{a}$ -i- $z\bar{a}$ -hir), such as s 'washing,' and s 'flying,' being masculine, are declined as nouns of the first variety of the 6th Declension; and those of the first, fifth, and sixth forms, ending in s, such as s 'mixing,' and s 'binding,' which are also masculine, as nouns of the 9th Declension.
- 198. The present participle is also used as a noun; thus آلواته signifies 'flight,' as well as 'fleeing;' پريوانه 'falling,' also 'a fall;' and پيرانده 'knowledge,' as well as 'knowing:' this will be more fully noticed under the head of حاصل مصدر hāṣil-i-maṣdar, or Verbal Noun.

THE PERFECT OR PAST PARTICIPLE.

ism-i-mafæūl.

- 199. The perfect or past participle denotes that the action of the verb is complete, and is obtained in three different ways both from transitives and intransitives.
- 200. I.—The first method is by adding  $(y\bar{a}-i-m\bar{a}-kabl-i-maft\bar{u}h)^*$  to the infinitive for the masculine, and  $(y\bar{a}-i-majh\bar{u}l)$  or (-) (kasrah) for the feminine singular; as کیښولي 'to place,' کیښولي 'placed;' لیدل 'seen;' لیدل 'seen;' غلول 'seen;' غلول 'cheated,' etc. The following are examples:

* For explanation regarding the letter &, see paragraphs 44 and 45.

"Whoever emergeth in safety from the sea of love,
I consider this very day BORN of his mother."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"If one person sayeth to another that our father Adam wove linen, and he sayeth unto him, 'Yes, and we are weaver's children,' and his (the latter's) intention be to lower the estimation of father Adam, he becometh a blasphemer."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

Examples of the feminine singular, Intransitives and Transitives.

"A second party of people appeared to him in hell, each with a fiery collar round the neck, and foot BOUND."—Miærāj Nāma'h.

"That STRICKEN princess through excess of love,
Was singing these verses in her own language."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

The plural form for both masculine and feminine is the same; and is obtained by substituting  $y\bar{u}$  ( $y\bar{u}$ -i-mawr $\bar{u}f$ ), in the same manner as for the nouns of the first variety of the 1st declension, and the form of adjectives described at paragraph 88.

"I cannot laugh and make merry with the people of the world,
For those DEPARTED ones make me weep and lament."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"With both eyes drawn towards the path of the adored one,

He was sitting distressed, in the intoxication of the wine of love."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

201. II.—The second form of this participle is obtained in a similar manner to the first, the only difference being that the ل of the infinitive is dropped, and the في, or () affixed to the root for the masculine and feminine singular, and for both plurals, as in the first class. They are sometimes formed from the same verbs and used indiscriminately; thus آفوستان 'to be dressed,' ناستان 'to sit,' ناستان 'seated;' ناستان 'to sit,' ناستان 'seated;' ناستان 'to sit,' آونستان 'turned back.' Examples:

"Consume and enjoy, oh! thou of good disposition, and true man,
What that one of INVERTED fortune collected together, but did not expend."—Gulistān.

"Notwithstanding I summon back this stag-eye CAPTURED heart, Yet like the deer it heedeth not my calling."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"This Sata'ı,* who consumeth herself, her intention is this—That consumed in the fire I am content; but not without honour."
—Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

"In outward dress a beggar, in words a niggard— Like a bright spark of fire ENVELOPED in dust and ashes."—Mīrzā Khān, Ansārī.

Examples of the plural masculine and feminine.

"The whole world pluck away their vestments from near me:

I am become like a smoke-blackened pot, though clothed in white garments."

—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"Another man appeared to him in hell, who was alike weeping and wailing. CLOTHED in garments of fire from head to foot, they tormented his every vein and artery—every nerve and bone."—Majmāæat-i-Kandahārī.

"At the Last Day they will, like an empty almond, become ashamed and confounded;

For many dressed out in the garments of the True Faith are infidels and blasphemers."

— Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"The eyes of the beloved are intoxicators, TURNED ROUND upon the lover to-day:

They are balls ready prepared for striking; observe for whose spoil and plunder they are."

—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

202. III.—The third class of past participles is formed from the irregular and defective verbs, such as پریوتل 'to fall,' and 'to rot,' and those similar to 'to stand,' and 'to stand,' and کنبیناستل or کنبیناستل 'to sit,' which have no regular past tense of their own. The past tense of the auxiliary شول 'to become,' is sometimes used in forming it. They appear to have originally been adjectives from which these infinitives have been formed, particularly those ending in یدل. The terminations for the masculine and feminine are also different to the other participles,* being subject to the same changes for gender and number as the classes of adjectives described at paragraphs 86 and 87.

The masculine singular is formed by dropping the يدل of the infinitive; as ولاير 'to stand,' ناستل 'to stand,' پريوتل 'stood; پريوتل 'fallen;' ناستل 'to sit,' ناستل 'to rot,' وروست 'rotten.' Examples:

"Hungry and thirsty, on thy own mat fallen thou art well off; But not so, SEATED on the dais in the house of another."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"Fallen over and over in red blood with fame, I am fortunate;

But not so without honour, even seated on the throne of red gold."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

At times, some of the participles of this class assume the form of the first class, by adding  $\omega$  to the infinitive, as in the following:

"Oh mine eyes, you should bid farewell! you, oh palms of my hands, and arms of my shoulders, too, should take leave of each other! Finally, you, oh my friends, should pass over (the grave) of this poor and humble fallen one!"—Gulistān.

To form the feminine singular,  $s(h\bar{a}-i-\underline{kh}afi)$  or  $(\angle)(fat'ha'h)$  is affixed to the masculine. Examples:

"Though thou environ thyself with a fortress of iron,

Thou wilt not escape from the tent of death erect in every court."

-Mīrzā Khān, Anṣārī.

* Strictly speaking, the participles are not parts of the verb, as they do not apply affirmation, but are merely adjectives, particularly this form.

"A waist BROKEN through the toil of industry and labour is good;
But not a purse of the money of unlawfulness round a man's waist."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

The plural masculine form of the third class of these past or perfect participles is the same as the singular, but the feminine plural changes the s and ( ) of the singular into ( )  $( y\bar{a}$ -i-majh $\bar{u}l)$  or ( ) (

"To-day we are proud of our existence:

To-morrow the world will count us amongst the DEPARTED."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"I know that thou merely perfectest thyself in bloodshed, Seated in this manner like the falcon, with eyes VEILED."-- Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

203. The past participles are capable of inflexion, and are subject to the same general laws as nouns; as in the following extracts:

"Notwithstanding I searched both in deserts and in hamlets,
I did not again obtain any information of those DEPARTED ones."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"I know not what is WRITTEN on my account:

I, Rahman, am in anxiety concerning these written things."—Æabd-ur-Rahman.

THE ACTOR OR NOUN OF ACTION.

- 204. The active participle, agent, or noun of action, denotes the performer of any action, and is an inflection of the verb, as in Arabic and Persian. It is transitive or intransitive, according to the verb from which it is derived; is both singular and plural; masculine and feminine; and is capable of inflection in the same manner as described at paragraph 88.
- 205. There are two methods of forming it—by dropping the  $\upsilon$  of the infinitive and adding ونكي  $\bar{u}nkaey$  or ونكي  $\bar{u}nkaey$  for the masculine, and ونكي  $\bar{u}nki$  or ونكي  $\bar{u}nki$  or ونكي  $\bar{u}nkey$ , or ونكي  $\bar{u}ni$  or ونكي

"Detriment and advantage, good and evil, are from God, who is the giver of kingdoms, and the TAKER of dominions: all is from God."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"I shall be a DEPARTER from this world,

As rapidly as the English discharge a cannon."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

"In it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger A DWELLER within thy gates."
— Translation of the Pentateuch.

"The day of judgment is also A COMER; doubt this not, oh my friends! On that day, what terrors and what fears will descend upon men!"—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"In the 'Jāmiæ-i-Ṣaghīr' it is thus stated: 'Prostration (in prayer) is the cause of grief and affliction to the devil; is also the Corrector of any error or inadvertency (in prayer); and, moreover, is the will of Almighty God."—Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

The plural form of this participle is both masculine and feminine. It is obtained, in the same manner as the plural form of the past participles of the first and second classes, by rejecting the final (0.0, 0.0), or (--) of the singular for (0.0, 0.0), or (0.0, 0.0) or (0.0, $\ensuremath{^{\prime\prime}}\xspace$  I perceive all are travellers, there are no tarriers behind :

The journeying on this road is both for young and for old."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

The following extract contains examples of the plural, both masculine and feminine:

"Five things are BREAKERS of prayer, and all are common. First, words are BREAKERS of prayer, whether they may be in sleep or in waking moments, whether intentionally or inadvertently, whether few or many."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

NOUN OF FITNESS.

ism-i-liyākat.

206. The noun of fitness is merely the infinitive in the genitive case; as,

"Some one knocked at the door, on which lady  $\mathbb{E}\bar{a}$ 'esh $\bar{a}$  said: "Who art thou? do not come in; for this is not a fit time for coming."— $Fan\bar{a}$ 'id-ush-Shari'æa'h.

"They who lament out of season, slumber at the proper time:

The beards of those persons are only fit to be pulled."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

There is an active participle or noun of action of intransitive verbs, but it is alone used as a noun of fitness. The following is an example:

"Waste not uselessly on me thy breath and thy medicine, oh physician!
For I am not one to recover, but one to die from the pangs of love."

-Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

OF THE TENSES.

207. As there is considerable difference in the formation of the inflections of the verbs intransitive and transitive, they will require to be separately explained.

According to the system of the Arabian grammarians, on which the grammatical rules of Pushto, as well as other Muhammadan languages are based, verbs have properly but one conjugation, and two changes of tense—the preterite or simple past, and the aorist; the other tenses being formed by the help of several particles, and the auxiliary verbs, 'to be,' 'to become,' 'to exist,' etc., already explained and illustrated.

With the exception of the infinitive, the verbs have two numbers,—the singular and the plural. There are also three persons, as in other languages; but the third person precedes the second, and the second the first person.

Verbs are also divided into perfect and imperfect, regular and irregular; the latter, and the imperfect verbs, being exceedingly numerous.

Much variation occurs in the formation of the different tenses of the last mentioned verbs, and there is also a change in termination for the feminine gender.

208. The paradigm of a regular intransitive verb in the active and passive voices, according to the Arabic system just referred to, given at paragraphs 405, 407, 408, and 409, shows the original tenses from which all the others can be formed. The active participle denotes the agent, and the passive participle the object acted on.

INTRANSITIVE VERBS.

PAST TENSE.

209. The past being antecedent to the present, according to the Oriental grammarians, must be first noticed.

The past tenses of intransitives are tolerably regular in comparison with transitives; still there are seven methods or rules regarding them which require some explanation.

I.—Most intransitives form the past tense by merely rejecting the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive and prefixing the particle  $\mathcal{J}$ , the peculiar sign of the past, which is also written  $\mathcal{J}$  and sometimes  $\mathcal{J}$ ; but the  $\mathcal{J}$  of this tense, like the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the past in Persian, is often omitted as redundant. The last radical letter is moveable; that is to say, it takes ( $\mathcal{J}$ ) ( $fat^{\prime}ha^{\prime}h$ ), or  $\mathcal{J}$  ( $h\bar{a}$ -i- $g\bar{a}hir$ ) after the final letter, for the masculine; as  $\mathcal{J}$  to know,  $\mathcal{J}$  to know,  $\mathcal{J}$  to know. From the third person five other inflections are formed, by the application of the affixed personal pronouns ( $\dot{\mathcal{J}}$  which have been already described.

II.—Are infinitives which form the past after the same manner as the preceding, but whose final characteristic letter is quiescent; as وْ چَاوِد 'to split,' چَاوِد 'to split;' خَاوِد 'to run,' وْ الْفَاسِتُ 'to run,' وْ الْفَاسِتُ 'to run,'

III.—Some infinitives ending in a quiescent consonant insert a , for the third person masculine singular, which is changed into t for the plural; as نحت 'to 'ascend,' خوت 'he ascended.' The other persons are regular; as ژ خوت 'I ascended,' etc.

IV.—A few infinitives reject the last radical letter as well as the sign of the infinitive in the past; as نُول 'to burn,' وُسه 'it burnt.' This verb is used both as a transitive and an intransitive.

V.—Intransitives formed from adjectives or nouns by affixing يدل reject it again in the past, and the past tense of the auxiliaries كيدل or كيدل is required to complete it; as مات شه 'to break,' مات شه 'it broke.'

VI.—Some infinitives ending in a silent consonant, which is generally ت, do not take the prefixed غ, and therefore their imperfect tenses are the same as the past; thus کښيناست 'to sit,' کښيناست 'he sat,' and 'was sitting.'

VII.—Infinitives having a ل as the final characteristic letter, reject it in the third person masculine singular; as راغیل 'to come,' راغیل 'he came.'

Examples will be found in the following extracts:

"In short, the youth attained the summit of strength and skill, and no one had the power of vying or competing with him."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

"For some time thou madest a captive of me: I ABANDONED for thee both name and fame.

Thou didst plunge me into inexpressible grief: I constantly beat my head against the stones."

— Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

210. There is an exception to the above general rule in the formation of the inflexions of this tense; for the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive is sometimes retained, and the affixed pronouns (except for the third person plural) added to it, as may be seen in the following couplet:

"Notwithstanding that I went according to the precepts of custom and usage,
I ATTAINED not to the knowledge of certainty and truth."—Mīrsā Khān, Ansārī.

211. To form the feminine singular of this tense, s  $(h\bar{a}-i-\underline{kh}af\bar{\imath})$  must be affixed to the final J of the infinitive; but sometimes the  $h\bar{a}-i-\underline{kh}af\bar{\imath}$  is substituted for the s of the masculine. The former is the most generally used. Examples:

"It is the consequent result of love that the eye weeps:
And also, that from weeping, my eye BECAME SWOLLEN."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"She took a tray in her hand and set out;
And with great expedition REACHED the prison."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

212. The third person singular and plural of the past tenses of intransitive verbs is alone subject to change in termination for gender, and the first and second persons merely take the plural form of the affixed personal pronouns for the plural number; as ؤرسيد و 'we arrived,' ورسيد و 'you arrived.'

The following is an example:

هم د تقدير لاس وړاند د سترګو د عقل څما پرده د غفلت آچول او لري کتون هوښياري څما په توري پردي د ناپوهي او ناداني کښي و لار او مُنګا ټول په يو څل په منګلي د بلا او د ارمان کښ و نښتو "The hand of destiny lowered the veil of imprudence before the eye of my judgment, and detained behind the obscure curtain of ignorance and incapacity my far-seeing prudence; and suddenly we all became ENTRAPPED in the talon of misfortune and sorrow."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

The following extract contains an example of the plural form of the past tense, in which, as explained in a preceding paragraph, the pronoun is affixed to the infinitive.

"A holy man repudiated the feigned manner of the Darweshes, and was entirely unacquainted with their sorrows and afflictions. In this manner we arrived at the palm-grove of Banī Hillāl."—Gulistān.

213. The third person masculine plural of verbs which do or do not take the prefixed j in the past tense, whether the tense be formed by rejecting or retaining the J of the infinitive or otherwise, is generally the simple infinitive with the j prefixed for the former, and the infinitive unchanged for the latter; thus ريرديدل 'to tremble,' ريرديدل 'they trembled;' افلل 'to come,' افلل 'they came.' The plural form of those which reject the j or drop it as redundant, will be explained in its proper place. The following is an example of the regular verbs:

"When Æalī Akbar and Kāsim fell, their families were standing by, and were melting with grief; for such had been written from all eternity."—Muḥammad Hanīfah.

214. There is another form of the past tense for the masculine plural of the third person, which may be easily mistaken for the third person feminine singular, as it is written with the same consonants as the latter. There is, however, a difference in the pronunciation; yet it is difficult to describe it in writing, and even when uttered by an Afghān tongue, it is almost imperceptible, and requires an Afghān ear to distinguish it. The nearest approach is by writing ( $\stackrel{}{=}$ ) over the final  $\stackrel{}{=}$ , which vowel points give a sound equivalent to the diphthong w, and similar to that which occurs in the plural form of the nouns of the fifth variety of the 6th declension. It is sometimes written with ( $\stackrel{*}{=}$ ) only. This form of termination is used both for transitive as well as intransitive verbs.\* The following is an example:

\* The author of the "Æjaib-ul-Lughat," in the preface to that work, remarks on this very subject in the following manner:—"I have adopted the lexicographical system of the Persian to express the Afghānī in this work, in order that it may be more easy to those acquainted with the former language; yet, notwithstanding this, the perfectness of sound and completeness of enunciation is alone to be acquired by oral practice. The word (i) is an example of this. When written with simple r,  $\bar{a}$ , quiescent gh, l with the short vowel a, and unaspirated h, or  $h\bar{a}$ -i- $h\bar{a}$ -l- $h\bar{a}$ -l-

"The Imām's head remained in Ṣāleḥ's court. Behold the Yazīdīs completely deceived! Ṣāleḥ, having hidden the head under his skirt, carried it away and buried it in Ḥasan's tomb."—Ḥasan and Ḥusain of Muḥammad Ḥanīfah.

215. & or is sometimes affixed to the third person singular and plural of this as well as other tenses, for the sake of euphony, and as a respectful form in religious works. Examples:

"When the light of my glory shook itself with force, a hundred and twenty-four thousand drops of perspiration Fell from it."— $N\bar{u}r\ N\bar{u}ma'h$ .

"Ten drops of sweat were diffused from my left hand. From the first drop, ten thousand rivers of pure wine flowed like torrents through Paradise; from the second, a river of honey; and from the third, a thousand sweet streams."— $Ma\underline{k}\underline{h}zan\ A\underline{f}\underline{gh}\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

To form the third person feminine plural of this tense the  $\circ$  or ( $\sim$ ) of the singular is changed to  $\circ$  or ( $\sim$ ), as will be seen in the following extracts:

"An old and respectable man who dwelt at Baghdād, gave his daughter in marriage to a shoemaker. The hard-hearted rascal bit her lips so, that the blood immediately flowed from them."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

"The other devils said unto him, 'Oh, master! wherefore art thou become so sorrowful, that the cries of thy grief have gone our into different lands?"—Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

216. I have already observed at paragraph 209, that a great many verbs at times reject as redundant the prefixed j, the sign of the past tense of regular verbs, both transitive as well as intransitive, without any apparent reason; thus:

"Bishr said, 'It is my solemn oath, by God! that the mouthful which I put into my mouth I knew was poisoned."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

In the following extract, which is an example of the same infinitive as the preceding one—پوهيدل 'to know,' etc.—the و of the past is retained.

"The family encamped on the very place, and they RECOGNIZED the spot of martyrdom."

—Muhammad Hanīfah.

217. There are also a number of defective as well as irregular verbs which entirely reject the j: in fact, to add that particle would render the word meaningless. In other respects these verbs are subject to the same changes for inflection as the others already described, as will be perceived from the following examples:

"The companions of the Prophet CAME to him and represented: "We have no water that we may drink, neither that we may perform our ablutions."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"When love-making and love-accepting CAME between, authority and dependence arose and departed."—Gulistān.

218. When the verb has a radical ل, as well as the ل of the infinitive, as in تلل , etc., one is generally rejected as redundant in the inflections for the different tenses, with the exception of the third person feminine singular and plural of a few, in which both are retained. In the third person masculine singular both are dropped. Example:

"The nightingales sing both in garden and in meadow—

'The flower of the spring, the Chosen One,* наs соме into the parterre.'" —Kāsim Æalī, Afridī.

Sometimes both J's are retained in this, as well as in other tenses of the verb. Example:

"One was Nakīr, the other Munkir—the whole torment was on my devoted head. At length THEY CAME forth—they stood before me, lookers-on."

-Story of Jumjumah.

219. The third persons of the past tense of some verbs, in which the letter ت precedes the sign of the infinitive, are somewhat irregular. In the third person singular they take , before the ت ; thus, خت 'to ascend,' instead of becoming ; خوت , becomes ز خوت ;

"The prince ASCENDED to a rising ground to obtain a view.

On both sides the warriors were falling from their steeds."—Bahrām Gār.

For the plural, the j is changed into 1; thus و خوت becomes في خوت. Sometimes, however, the past masculine plural is written ز ختل. An example of the former is contained in the following extract: †

"At this sight Adam Khān laid waste his heart; and all solicitude for name and fame went out of it."—Story of Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

220. There are several compound ‡ verbs, both intransitive, as well as transitive, such as نبيوتل 'to fall,' كښيوتل 'to fall into,' كښيوتل 'to sit down,' etc., which are obtained by prefixing a preposition or a post-position to a simple infinitive, the formation of the past tenses of which is difficult, and requires some explanation. Instead of placing the 'of the past tense, when expressed, before the word in its compound state, it is inserted after the preposition. Thus the past tense of the infinitive 'بريوتل , instead of becoming 'بريوتل , is written 'بريوتل ; and 'بريوتل , كښيوتل . In many recent manuscript works, and in some of older date also, one is omitted in writing; and in conversation the sound of the second letter is scarcely perceptible. From this a difficulty arises, if the past tense be written or spoken without the second ; for then there is no difference between the past and the imperfect, and consequently there would be, in some instances, a doubt regarding the meaning. Mīrzā Khān, Anṣārī, who is one of the oldest Puśhto authors we know of, always makes the difference between the past and the imperfect form. in which I have followed him; thus:—

+ In this case the final letter is no longer quiescent, but takes s or (___) as in the example referred to.

† These verbs show in what manner some of the compound words in Pushto are formed. وتل means 'to go out,' and with on' or 'from him,' etc., becomes پريوتل 'to fall.' Again, the same infinitive with the post-position بريوتل 'inside,' etc., produces بريوتل 'to become entangled,' 'to fall into,' etc.

Some of the best prose authors also make use of the second, to distinguish the past, as in this example:

"When this news reached Najāshī, HE FELL from his throne; and Abrahah FELL DOWN from his horse into the birds' mouths."— $Bab\bar{u}\ J\bar{a}n.$ \*

Khūshhāl, Ḥamīd, Raḥmān, Shaidā, Ķāsim Æalī, and others, write the past tense of this class of verbs with one, but with (-) over it; their meanings are, however, not to be mistaken. The following are examples:

"It was not love, it was a thunderbolt from the heavens,
That suddenly fell on my head and my possessions."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"I fell right into the man-devouring whirlpools of love:

Neither can I advance, nor am I able to run back."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

221. Another form of the past tense of intransitive verbs remains to be noticed. Infinitives, formed chiefly from adjectives, such as ماتيدل 'to break,' نتيريدل 'to conceal,' تيريدل 'to pass,' etc., require the past tense of the auxiliary 'to become,' to be added after dropping the يدل of the infinitive. Thus 'broken,' پُنت شه 'passed.' The auxiliary, as well as the adjective, is subject to change in termination for gender and number. Examples:

"Neither did I go distracted at the rumour of being separated from her, Nor did I become deaf: as I was, so indeed I now am."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"From the time I became a captive many years Passed over me,
And thou didst not seek for any information regarding me."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

222. In all the inflexions of intransitive verbs, the regular personal pronouns, 'I,' 'thou,' etc., may also be prefixed as in Persian. It is equally as correct to say رافلم as زد رافلم; but the affixed pronouns are indispensable, as in the language just referred to, as well as in Arabic and Hebrew, to which, in this particular, Pushto bears a remarkable similarity.*

223. This tense denotes some incomplete past action, either near or remote; and is obtained by dropping the prefixed; of the past; as,—

"I USED TO FLY to deserts and mountains from the society of men, that I might not be occupied save in the worship of God.

Only imagine then what my state must be at this hour, that, in a tether with brutes, I must endure their society."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

224. The plural is formed, as in the past tense, by changing the different affixed personal pronouns to the plural form; and the third person masculine plural is the same as the simple infinitive. The following are examples:

"The wrestler saw that the whole of the caravan were trembling for their lives, and had resigned their hearts to destruction."—Gulistān.

225. The same observation regarding the personal pronouns being sometimes affixed to the infinitive without dropping the  $\mathcal{J}$ , as in the past tense, described at paragraph 212, is equally applicable to the imperfect, except for the third person masculine plural, which, as mentioned in the preceding paragraph, remains unchanged. For the feminine plural, the s or (—) of the singular is changed to s or (—), and affixed to the simple infinitive. Examples:

"Through excess of sorrow King Ṣaf'wān fell into despair,
And grief and affliction returned to him with increased force.
Again he said, 'In the first place I was not conceiving for a moment,
That this fire would blaze up in my dwelling.'"—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

* The custom of affixing this class of pronouns probably sprung from the Semitic languages. In Sindhī they are also much used; for a Sindhīan can searcely utter a sentence without prefixing them to nouns as well as verbs. They are also used in Pehlavī, the mother of modern Persian.

"The Chikor* for this reason is sunk up to the knee in blood,
That she was wont to vie with her in walking."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

226. As I have already remarked at paragraph 220, the imperfect tenses of those verbs which do not take the prefixed; in the past, or drop it at times as redundant, are, in nine cases out of ten, written precisely the same as the past; and the signification in many instances is only to be discovered from the context. In conversation, too, the difference is scarcely perceptible; and it is only by practice in the language that the difficulty is to be overcome. Examples:

"The agreement that thou hadst made with me, thou now desirest to break. I was THINKING, that in the present day, fidelity is a medicine which is not to be found in the shop of the druggist of the world."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

"When this picture USED TO FALL under people's observation,
They were wont to be drawn towards it, on viewing it, as if fascinated."

-Saif-ul-Mulūk.

227. The third person singular and plural of this, as well as of the other past tenses, is alone subject to change in termination to agree with a feminine governing noun, whatever be the class of verb, regular, irregular, or defective, and will not require a separate explanation, as it has already been referred to at paragraph 210. I shall, however, give a few extracts as examples.

"In tears she came to the house, and went out after him with her head bare. She was wont to wander about in great distress; and, on account of separation, used to reel and stagger."—Tavallud Nāma'h.

"The Wuzīr said, 'Two pigeons were dwelling in the same nest. The name of one was Bāzindah, the other Nawāzindah." \—Kalīlah no Damnah.

"From the eyes of those which used not to become satiated with the treasuries of the world, the red tears of blood have now flowed like rain."— $Bab\bar{u}\ J\bar{a}n$ .

228. The following extract contains an example of the masculine plural of the imperfect tense, formed according to the rules I have already explained for the past at paragraph 214, as being similar in mode of writing to the third person feminine singular, without the vowel points.

"God became pleased at the victory of the Yezīdīs, and distorted the revolutions of destiny. His (Ḥusain's) family were becoming sadly afflicted through anguish, and rivers of tears were flowing from their eyes."—History of Ḥasan and Ḥusain.

229. Although the class of imperfect verbs, such as تيريدل, ماتيدل, وكيدل, etc., have no regular past tense, and require the past of نشول 'to become,' to form it; yet they have a regular imperfect, as other verbs. Examples:

"The prince placed his shield under his head and then stretched himself on the ground; After which, the thought of this danger was passing in his mind."— $Bahr\bar{a}m$   $G\bar{u}r$ .

"Understanding and intelligence he possessed beyond bounds. In the same manner in his childhood, the signs of his future greatness, used to be apparent on his forehead."—Gulistān.

230. Another form of this tense is obtained by prefixing the particle & to the past. It implies continuity and habitude, as will be seen from the examples:

"That grief which I bore on account of my beloved, although it was a load upon me;
And, notwithstanding, some used to call me mad, yet I was wont to roam in happiness."

— Yūsuf and Zulīkhā

"They will say, 'These were our practices, that when the summons to prayer reached our ears, we used to arise to perform our ablutions, and used not to be occupied in any other matters."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

- "Like unto Majnūn thou wert used to wander about wildly, Ever making inquiries after Laylā, both in deserts and in wilds."—Ķāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.
- 231. It will be necessary here to notice the great imperfection and irregularity of some Pushto verbs, of which راغلل is a specimen. The real infinitive appears to be غلل , to which the class of pronouns described at paragraphs 132—134 are prefixed. Thus راغلل literally means 'to come to me or us;' نرغلل 'to come to thee or you;' and راغلل 'to come to him, her, it, or them. راغلل however, appears to be the common form of the verb 'to come;' for ورغلل are also used with it; as, ور ته راغلو 'I came to thee or you;' ورغلل or رغلل or درغلل or درغلل or درغلل ورغلل ورغلل or درغلل ورغلل ورغلل or درغلل or درغل or درغ
- 232. راغلل 'to come,' is another infinitive similar to the preceding, but its principal use is to form the actor, imperfect, and conditional tenses of راغلل, in which the latter is deficient. What is most surprising, and I imagine not to be found in the grammatical structure of any other language, is, that the proper past tense of راتلل conveys no preterite signification, and is only used as the imperfect of ورغلل ; and راغلل ; ورغلل ورتلل ; ورغلل ; ورغلل ورتلل ; ورغلل ; ورغلل ; ورغلل ). Several tenses in which both infinitives are defective, are obtained by prefixing المرابع , and ورغلل 'to become,' and will be found in the conjugations. An example is contained in the following:

- "Jabrā'il said, 'O prophet of God! my last sight of the earth is taken, because thou wert the object of my desire when I used to come. Now that thou departest from this world, I have no intention of coming again."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.
- 233. تلل, when used without the pronominal affixes, signifies 'to go;' but it is also imperfect, and has merely a past participle, agent, and imperfect tense. Examples of the masculine and feminine form of the imperfect tense of this verb are contained in the following extracts:

"All alone he was going along the road—no one was with him:

A hundred praises on such a brave and bold-hearted youth."—Bahrām Gūr.

"Nevertheless modesty became an obstacle, and with empty sighs she contented herself. The secret of love she was wont to keep concealed, although from her eyes bloody tears USED TO FLOW."—Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

COMPOUND PAST TENSES.

234. The principal use of the past or perfect participle is in the formation of the compound tenses; and, as I have already given such a lengthened explanation of the former, little remains to be noticed regarding the latter, which are obtained from them by the addition of the auxiliary verbs, or رابط الزماني, rawābit-uz-zamānī, as they are termed by the Arabian grammarians. It will be necessary, however, to treat of them separately.

PERFECT TENSE.

- 235. The perfect tenses are formed by the addition of the present tense of the auxiliary 'to be,' to the past or perfect participles, described at page 75; and, like the latter, are of three different classes.
- 236. There is such a slight difference between the two first classes—the retention or rejection of the  $\cup$  of the infinitive—that I shall give examples of them indiscriminately, as both end in  $\bigcirc$ , and the terminating letter is alone subject to change for gender and number. Examples of the masculine singular and plural will be found in the following extracts:

"Until by the stroke of death it is not turned aside, Make not my countenance a turner away from thee."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"When the morning dawned, and it was time to take wing, perplexed and irresolute in counsel, he began saying, 'What shall I do? shall I return, or with the purposed intention for which I have come out, should I take the road of amusement and recreation?"—Kalīlah no Damnah.

237. The participle must agree with the auxiliary in gender in the formation of the feminine form of this tense. Example:

"That thing, the time for acquiring which may have passed away, becometh the Phœnix of one's desires;

But the immortal bird, as yet, HATH not BEEN CAUGHT in any one's net."— Zabd-ur-Raķmān.

"The sound of his charming words hath gone out into every land; and a piece of his composition is held as precious as a bond; as valuable as a note of hand."—Preface to the Gulistān.

238. The plural form of the past participle being the same for both genders, the only difference in the masculine and feminine form of the tense is in the auxiliaries; thus:

"We have come to you for assistance, therefore, make some such excuse, that  $Dur\underline{kh}\bar{a}na'\bar{\imath}$  may show her face to us."— $Adam\ \underline{Kh}\bar{a}n\ and\ Dur\underline{kh}\bar{a}na'\bar{\imath}$ .

"The curtains of carelessness and inadvertency must have fallen on thy eyes: If not so, the beloved has not drawn the veil over her face."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

239. Properly speaking the auxiliary should immediately follow the participle, but it often precedes it, or follows after several intervening words, as in the following examples:

"Since the bright luminary of his equity and justice HATH SET,

The black night of oppression has set in, and filled the land with darkness."

—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"The curls of this wanton sweetheart are hanging all dishevelled;
Like a shadow they have OVERSPREAD her lovely cheek."— $M\bar{\imath}rz\bar{a}$   $\underline{Kh}\bar{a}n$ ,  $Ans\bar{a}r\bar{\imath}$ .

240. Like their Persian neighbours, some of the best Afghān authors are fond of using the past participle for the perfect and pluperfect tenses, the auxiliary being understood, to connect the members of the sentence, and suspend the sense, both in prose as well as in poetry. Example:—

- "Shouldst thou look towards my servants, they (have) come to my house in a state of affliction and distress, covered with dust from the blowing of the winds; searchers after my will; seekers of my mercy: they (have) come solely on my account."—Fanā'īd-ush Sharī'æa'h.
- 241. The following are examples, both masculine and feminine, of the perfect tense obtained from the third class of the past participles of verbs, which are either imperfect, irregular, or have a preposition or postposition prefixed. Examples:

"If thy face is concealed with curls, there is no cause of apprehension; For the waters of immortality, too, are concealed in total darkness."

-Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"Some were saying, 'This is caused by demons who have seated themselves on this fair one's spirit:

When a fiend takes possession of any one, he then sits alone, and apart from others."

- Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

"I AM SUNK into doubt and perplexity as to whether I AM AWAKE or whether I AM ASLEEP.

Do I see the fulfilment of my desires, and the exceeding beauty of my beloved, merely in a dream?"— Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

- 242. The pluperfect tense is formed in the same manner as the perfect, from the three classes of the past participles, to which is affixed the past tense of the auxiliary 'to be.' It is subject to the same changes in termination for gender and number as the preceding tense.
  - 243. Examples of the singular masculine and feminine:

"Yaḥyā Khān, together with his younger brothers, not one of whom had, as yet, reached man's estate, girded up their loins to avenge their father. With the assistance of the clan, they changed the bright day of the enemy into darksome night, and wreaked vengeance for his death upon the foe, whom they ruined and annihilated."—Afzal Khān: Tārīkh-ī-Muraṣṣaæ.

"Halīma'h* had gone out somewhere, and had not been apprised concerning the Prophet. Some one gave her information concerning him; and, through dread on his account, she uttered loud cries."—Tawallud Nāma'h.

"One day I had sat down on the throne quite happy, and without the least apprehension:

The heat wholly overpowered me, and I became feverish, my body weak and languid."

—Story of King Jumjumah.

'Alone I над lain down on the couch; I над faller asleer in tranquillity and repose; When suddenly this vile slave—the faithless, treacherous ingrate—
Laid his hand upon my person; and put his lips unto my chin:
Then on the fastening of my dress he placed his odious fingers."—Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

244. Examples of the plural:

"There were ten envoys from each country, who had arrived from time to time. Her father treated them with distinction; he feasted them with magnificence."

— Yūsuf`and Zulīkhā.

"The feet of those who had taken up a place in the midst, HAD STUCK FAST in the honey; and when they wanted to fly away, their wings also became smeared with it, and they fell into the net of destruction and perdition."— Kalīlah no Damnah.

"Around the walls of the palace there were silken lines fastened; And splendid dresses of all sorts and kinds had dropped on them."—Saif-ul-Mul $\bar{u}k$ .

245. As I have already remarked respecting the use of the past participle for the perfect tense by some writers, they are in the same manner partial to the use of the participle for the pluperfect, the auxiliary being understood. Example:

"N. is the splendour of Muḥammad, which has shone and which has been diffused on the whole world.

It was the dark night of chaos and inexistence when he like a sun had arisen in it."

-Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

246. This tense is also formed from the different past participles by the addition of the agriculture of the auxiliary 'to be,' which may precede or follow the participle, and is not subject to change in termination for gender and number, the participle being alone affected.

"He who may have fallen from mountains again ariseth;

But he cannot arise again who may have dropped from hearts."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"The eighth is that man whose rank and employment an enemy may have sought; and having outstripped him, MAY HAVE ATTAINED that office, and gained the confidence of the sovereign who giveth ear to his tales."—Kalīlah no Damnah.

"Before the first night as yet MAY HAVE PASSED over a dead person, it is a regulated institution that alms should be given on his account."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

247. Examples of the plural:

"The cattle which for the most part of the year may have been kept in thine own house, and MAY not HAVE GRAZED in the wilds, there is no portion of alms to be given on their account."—Favā'īd-ush-Shavī'æa'h.

"Their eyes WILL HAVE BECOME RAISED towards the road of those Who may have in their hands charitable gifts and alms."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

248. There is another form of this tense obtained by adding the 2nd future tense of the auxiliary 'to be,' to the different past participles. The following are examples:

"He MAY HAVE LAUGHED heartily, or MAY not.

His heart's grief MAY HAVE BECOME BEGUILED, or MAY not.

He MAY HAVE CHOSEN tranquillity and ease, or MAY not.

Some one MAY HAVE INQUIRED about the matter, or MAY not."— **Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

"See! he may have become seated, aggrieved, amongst some asses,

Or MAY HAVE FALLEN like a ruby amongst dust and ashes."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"May God confound thee, thou fly of human nature;

For no mouth may have been left free of thy kiss."—Ahmad Shāh, Abdālī.

PAST CONDITIONAL TENSE.

- 249. The past conditional or optative tense of the Pushto verbs is obtained by subjoining the imperfect or conditional tense of the auxiliary 'to be,' to the past participle, with which a conditional conjunction or adverb of wishing must either be expressed or understood in the same sentence.
- 250. The auxiliary remains unchanged in all three persons; and the past participle is alone subject to change in termination for gender and number, therefore, a few examples will suffice.

"Would that I had never been born! that I had never come into this world!

That I had never seen grief, nor experienced this amount of tyranny and oppression!"

— Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

"He burst into tears; and he also complained against the folks, saying, 'IF my son нар выер, half the people of Balkh would have condoled with me."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

251. With a conditional conjunction or adverb of wishing, either expressed or understood, the second person singular of the imperfect tense of verbs also conveys a conditional or optative signification similar to the preceding, but it is alone used for all six inflexions. The following are examples:

"For a fool there is nothing better than silence: WERE HE AWARE of this counsel he would not be a fool."—Gulistān.

"I нар нот sunk to this degree in grief and affliction,
If admonition нар gone more or less into my heart."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"Could the hand of any one Accomplish the works of the Almighty,

No one would suffer a moment to pass without obtaining his own desires."

-Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

252. The second form of the imperfect tense, obtained from the simple past by prefixing the particle &, as already described at paragraph 230, is also much used in the construction of the past conditional tense, as will be seen from the following example:

"By whatever road they were fleeing, the stones were raining on them: if they ascended the mountains, the dread birds followed them."— $Tanallud\ N\bar{a}ma'h$ .

253. Sometimes the condition is expressed by the simple imperfect, and the consequence by the second form of the imperfect above alluded to. Example:

254. The simple past tense is also often used in a hypothetical sense, and the consequence by the second future tense; as,

"The Kattar Kafirs will become converts to Islam,
If the guardian (of the beloved) is softened by my tears."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

&quot;I will seize the sword of courage and resolution,
If grace and mercy come from that which is hidden."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

255. Of the two forms of the conditional just explained, that obtained from the imperfect, which is formed from the past tense of the auxiliary 'to be,' with the particle & prefixed, is alone subject to change in termination for gender and number.

PRESENT TENSE.

- 256. There being thirteen classes of intransitive verbs, including perfect and imperfect, the present tense of each is formed in a different manner, by altering, rejecting, or adding other letters after dropping the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive, and affixing the necessary pronouns.
- 257. The present tense of verbs of Class I. is formed by rejecting the ل of the infinitive, and changing the last radical letter for another; as رغيري 'to recover' (health), رغيري 'he recovers;' آلوتل 'to fly,' وغيري 'he flies;' نښتل 'to become ensnared,' نښلي 'he becomes ensnared;' پوهيري 'to know,' etc., پوهيري 'he knows.'

"Man neither dies on account of it, nor recovers from it:

Let not the Almighty afflict any one with the pain of love!"

-Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"This is not the nightingale which flieth around the roses:
It is my soul which hath flown towards thee."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"Some became prophets, and some became disciples; but they made a gentle disposition and good qualities a net; they led particular persons astray; and the public BECOME entangled in the net like birds."— $Ma\underline{kh}$  an  $Afg\underline{h}$   $\bar{a}n\bar{\iota}$ .

"In the worship of God, the sweat flows like a river;
But I tire not at mid-day from ploughing the land."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

"The Prophet said to us, 'Do You know what this stinking smell is occasioned by?' The companions of the Prophet said unto him, 'We do not know what this impure smell is produced from.'"—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

258. The present tense of the verbs of Class II. is formed by dropping the ل of the infinitive, and rejecting the two last radical letters; as in زغلیدل 'to run,' and وریدل or اوریدل (نګیدل 'to hang.' Examples:

"I obtained such assistance from the potentiality of the spirit,

That in one breath I RUN from Kaf to Kaf—from one end of the world to the other."

—Mīrzā Khān, Ansārī.

"Though rain falleth on it for an age,
The thistle will never a violet become."*—Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

"Red with blood like unto red roses swing

A thousand hearts in every bend and twist of thy ringlets."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

- 259. The 1 of infinitives of some of the verbs of this class, similar to those of which this last example is a specimen, is rejected; but chiefly by the Western Afghāns; as, انكيدل; for زانكيدل
- 260. The verbs of Class III. reject the ل of the infinitive and the three last letters in forming the present tense; as کښيناستل 'to sit.'

"The hawk said, 'When he calls out to me, I return from my flight, and I sit on his hand.' The cock answered, 'Thou speakest truly."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

261. The verbs which constitute Class IV. are few in number. They reject the J of the infinitive and the last radical letter, altogether, in forming the present tense; and the first vowel, which is long, is lost by elision; as in چاردل 'to crack or split.' Example:

"She has no equal in loveliness,

On her account, loving hearts BREAK."

—Ahmad Shāh, Abdālī.

262. Class V. drops the من of the infinitive and the last radical letter for two others in forming the present; as ختل 'to ascend' in the following example:

* The violet is known as the Gul-i-Paighambar, or the Prophet's flower.

"Through crudity and rawness, ebullition and agitation ARISETH from the pot:

Of the heart's death, the manifest tongue giveth evidence."— **Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

263. The verbs of Class VI. merely reject the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive, without altering the other letters more than substituting  $\mathcal{J}$  for  $\mathcal{J}$ ; as  $\mathcal{J}$ , 'to die.'

"At the fountain of attainment of desire, I DIE with lips parched,
From the burning inflammation of the anxiety of separation."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

264. Class VII. adds another letter after dropping the ئ of the infinitive, for the present tense, as in سُول 'to burn.' Example:

"On becoming aware that Mulūk викнети in the fire of love,

He again began to speak his thanks and congratulations to him."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

- 265. The verbs of the remaining six classes are all imperfect, and only two—Classes VIII. and X.—have any present tense; the remainder take the present of other verbs to supply the deficiency.
- 266. The present tense of verbs of Class VIII. is formed in a similar manner to that of the verbs of Class I., by dropping the ل of the infinitive and substituting another letter for the last radical one; as in باتيدل 'to break,' پاتيدل 'to remain,' تيريدل 'to pass away,' etc. Example:

"Alas for pleasant life that passeth thus away!
Like a stream it floweth swiftly past, alas! alas!"—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

زغانستان 'to run,' which is of Class IX., has no present tense, but uses the present of زغلیدل, which bears the same signification, and has been already described under Class II., to which it belongs.

267. Verbs of Class X. form the present tense in a similar manner to those of Class VI., by the mere rejection of the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive, and adding the different affixed pronouns; as in عربيل 'to go.' Example:

"We used not to know, at all, ourselves, as to where WE GO;
Neither did we (then) understand what country it is or what place."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

268. لايل 'to go,' which comes under Class XI., has no present tense, and uses that of تلك 'to go or depart,' which belongs to the following class.

269. The infinitive تلك 'to go or depart,' which constitutes Class XII. is one of the most irregular verbs in the Pushto language, and uses خ or خ as the present tense, which belongs to some unknown root. Example:

270. راغال 'to come,' constitutes Class XIII. of the intransitive verbs, and is similar to the preceding. The prefixed ب is changed, according to the person referred to, for عمل ب , the significations of which have been given in Chapter V. It has no present tense of its own, and uses that of تلل , with the prefixed pronouns already referred to. The following is an example:

"Again a sound came, that Ibrāhīm the friend of God сомети, Aggrieved in heart on account of Imām Ḥusain's death.

The lady Sā'īra'h, too, approacheth afflicted and sorrowful;

Disconsolate on account of Imām Ḥusain's death."—Миḥаттай Hānīfah.

271. In works on divinity and other religious writings, or is very generally affixed to the third person singular and plural, masculine and feminine, of the present tense, as in the first line of the example just given. It is also added to the aorist, future, imperative, and the past; and will be found explained under those heads.

AORIST TENSE.

272. Properly speaking, the present tense is formed from the aorist by rejecting the prefixed; of the latter, which constitutes the only difference between them; therefore, it will not be necessary to give separate examples of each of the thirteen classes of the intransitive verbs, but merely to point out any peculiarities that may exist, and exceptions to general rules. Examples:

"Like as a fowl MAY BECOME ENTANGLED in a loose snare of a hundred nooses, So (her) dishevelled locks entangled me in embarrassment and perplexity."

- Eabd-ul-Hamid.

"When it comes to his recollection that 'I have not made the first kaæda'h,'* and he be about to arise from his sitting posture, HE SHOULD RETURN to the same position and perform the kaæda'h."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"If I should stand here, the crow will seize me: what is it necessary to do? He said—'The appliances of genius and prudence are invented as a remedy for difficulty and perplexity.'"—Kalilah no Damnah.

"If a person should die, and may have repented of calumny, he will enter into Paradise before all the rest of the creation; but if HE SHOULD DIE, and may not have repented of slander and evil-speaking, he will enter Hell long before the rest of the world."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

273. The prefixed j of this tense, like the  $\rightarrow$  of the Persian, is often rejected as redundant, but the proper signification can seldom be mistaken. Examples:

"What cause for astonishment is it, though the Phænix SHOULD BECOME ENTANGLED in the net, (By means) of every bird-catcher who possesseth the net of sincerity and love."

-Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"Wisdom also maketh this demand, that the dust of unfaithfulness should not rest on the skirt of any one's circumstances or affairs. The cock answered him—'What ingratitude, or what bad faith has been found in me?'"—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

"Our God hath bestowed grace on the Faithful, that THEY SHOULD WALK in the ways of Muhammad, the Chosen One."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

274. An example of the  $\odot$  or  $\varnothing$  prefixed to the third persons of the agrist, as well as other tenses in religious writings, for the sake of euphony, referred to at paragraph 215, is contained in the following extract:

"Whether a man may sink in the water and be drowned, or MAY BECOME CONSUMED in fire, or may be devoured by wolves; under all these circumstances the interrogation (at the last day) is certain and beyond a doubt; for He is Omniscient, and Omnipotent."— Fanā'īd-uṣḥ-Sharī'æa'h.

امر حاضر 1st Future or Precative Tense.

- 275. The first future or precative tense is precisely the same as the agrist with the exception that it adds the particle  $\varphi$  to the third person singular and plural, whether masculine or feminine, and by which it is always distinguishable.
- 276. As the agrist merely differs from the present by the prefixed; and the 1st future from the agrist by prefixing the  $\varphi$  to the third persons, consequently it will be unnecessary to give examples of each of the intransitives, which have already been given for the present, as by prefixing the particles referred to, these tenses can be formed. Examples:

"He should stand parallel to the head of the mausoleum, with his face towards Makka'h, and he should stand about three or four yards distant."—Fana'īd-ush-Shari'æa'h.

"If a man by inadvertency should omit the appointed section of the Kur'ān (in prayer) in either of the first two inclinations of the body, and, at the time of making the inclination, it cometh to his recollection; HE SHOULD RETURN to the bending position, and on that very place repeat the section required."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

277. Like the preceding tense, the prefixed j of this also is often rejected altogether, and sometimes understood; as in the following extract:

"A listener to slander will become liberated from that sin, when he shall deny it with his tongue, and shall refrain from it, or shall put in a word, so that the calumny be refuted; or HE SHOULD RISE UP from the place and release himself from hearing backbiting."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

278. When a personal pronoun is used with the third person of this tense, the  $\varphi$  precedes the prefixed  $\xi$ , but when the third personal pronoun is not used, the  $\xi$  precedes the  $\varphi$ ; as in the following example:

"Let not fire REACH the house of any one,
Though its brightness be the sun's or the moon's."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

ومستقبل 2nd Future Tense.

279. The second future tense is formed from the agrist by the addition of the particle  $\omega$ , and is subject to exactly the same rules and variations as that tense. Examples are contained in the following extracts:

"Passing over the bridge of Sarāt is true my friends, and You WILL BE PERTURBED through awe. Both good and bad WILL ASSEMBLE on it; all actions will be weighed; and every one WILL KNOW the state of his case."—Farā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"If thou dost not take pity on me, I shall die. Thou wilt not act rightly: thou wilt murder thy sister! Why dost thou speak, oh deceiver?"—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

"There are some scorpions of Hell, that if they strike a mountain with their sting, IT WILL BURN, and become ashes."— $B\bar{a}b\bar{u}$   $J\bar{a}n$ .

280. As in the two preceding tenses, the prefixed j of this tense also, is rejected as redundant; but invariably so for those verbs which do not take j in the past tense, previously explained.

"Depressed in mind, and altered in countenance, Adam Khān said unto Mīro and Balo: If this affair is not completed by my hand, I will disappear from this country. WILL YOU GO with me, or WILL YOU not?"—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

281. When a regular personal pronoun (ضمير منفصل), as well as the affixed personal pronoun (ضمير منتصل), is used in this tense, the به precedes the particle غ, but when no separate pronoun is used, the به follows the غ. Examples:

"I am a longer after roses: I am burnt to the heart by separation.

Shouldst thou put off the time to evening even, I shall become entirely consumed."

– Yūsuf and Zulīkhā

"The morning of the dark night of sorrow WILL DAWN at last!"

The grief of separation will at length reach its termination!"—Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

282. In poetry some license is taken with respect to the &: it is often inserted between the syllables of a word, and also, in the case of a compound verb, formed by prefixing a preposition or postposition to a simple infinitive.

"When in this doubt, he should look from the corner of his eye towards the congregation, and determine

That 'if they sit, I WILL ALSO SIT, and if they rise, I WILL also RISE.' "-Rashīd-ul-By'ān.

Several words may also intervene between the particle and the verb—one may be at the commencement, the other at the termination of the sentence; as in this extract:

"Utter not any more words of counsel or admonition unto me, Otherwise I will now go out to the paganism of black curls."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

IMPERATIVE.

283. The imperative mood is always formed in a similar manner to the 1st future tense, with these exceptions, that it has no first person singular or plural, and that it drops the affixed personal pronoun for the second persons, and is not liable to change in termination for gender; but in other respects it is subject to the same rules and exceptions as the preceding tenses of the agriculture. The following are examples:

"Go not towards Syria! TURN BACK now! Remain stationary in some place, if thou hast any affection for the Prophet."—Tanallud Nāma'h.

"Be not deceived, oh hermit, with the asceticism of hypocrisy!

For the slave-girl's son and daughter will be held in no estimation."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"Come sometimes to my tomb, oh my beloved one!
Burn not my heart (even there) with the fire of separation."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

TRANSITIVE VERBS.

افعالِ متعدي afaæāl-i-mutaæaddī.

PAST TENSE. ماضي مطلق

- 284. Under this head are included primitive and causal verbs, which form their past tenses somewhat differently from intransitives, by rejecting the J, the sign of the infinitive mood, and prefixing to this base or root the particle, the sign of the past, which is written غندل ; and occasionally ; as و خاند 'to shake,' من فندل 'to shake,' من فندل 'he shook'; ألوزول 'to cause to fly,' or والوزاوو 'he first letter of the infinitive is ī, the of the past tense is used without the (خ), and thus becomes united to the ī.
- 286. A few verbs derived from nouns and pronouns by the addition of قل عنه عنه عنه عنه عنه عنه والم عنه عنه عنه عنه والم خلول 'a sacrifice,' جار کر 'to sacrifice,' جار کر 'he sacrificed;' خپل 'self,' خپل 'to make one's own,' خپل کر 'he gained over.' There is, however, an exception to this, as in all other rules, in ويرو 'to frighten,' from ويره 'fright,' which becomes ؤ ويراوو or ؤ ويراؤه or ويراؤه or ويراؤه or به 'he frightened,' thus lengthening the vowel preceding the final letter from (علم ) to 1, which is also the rule with regard to most primitive infinitives terminating in J.
- 287. Primitive intransitives are made transitive by changing the J of the infinitive into غريد الله على 'to shed,' 'to seatter,' رژول 'to strew,' 'to dispel;' to swing,' نگول 'to make to swing;' and derivative intransitives obtained from adjectives are made transitive by changing the يدل of the infinitive into يدل 'to burn,' بلول 'to consume;' and which are subject to the rules laid down in paragraph 285.
- 288. Transitive verbs must agree with their objects in gender and number, in all the inflections of the past; and the object must be in the nominative, and sometimes in the dative, and the agent in the instrumental case.

"The king called the boy's mother and father, and dismissed them with many gifts."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

289. The affixed personal pronouns (ضماير متصله) are not used with transitive verbs in the past tense, and the regular prefixed personal pronouns in the instrumental case must be used instead.

The other form of personal pronoun used with verbs to denote the agent, described at paragraphs 129-131, is used with transitive verbs to denote the agent, and may precede or follow the ; the sign of the past.

When, as in the following example, an affixed personal pronoun may be used with a transitive verb, it points out the objective case; as—

"The whole of this tribe assembled before Midād and Madad, saying, 'Give us information with regard to the future, as to what will be the condition of the tribe; and why did you not inform us respecting the events which have passed, that we might have taken counsel in the accomplishment of our affairs, so that we had not sustained such detriment and injury?"—

Afzal Khān.

- 290. The twenty-four classes of transitives, perfect and imperfect, have ten methods of forming the past tense, which I shall divide into as many forms.
- 291. Form I. The verbs of Classes I., VI., VII., VIII., and XII. form their past tenses by rejecting the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive, and lengthening the first vowel from ( $\mathcal{L}$ ) to  $\mathcal{I}$  in the singular; as in the following examples:

"With what modesty and diffidence shall I behold bashfulness and chasteness? The bud hath thrown back the veil from its head for the sake of the rose."

—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"Mullā Karmālī SENT SOME ONE on before, saying, 'Go and give information to Durkhāna'ī, that The Unfortunate, with people along with him, hath come to the spring.'"—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

292. The long vowel 1 is again rejected in the plural for ( $\stackrel{\checkmark}{-}$ ); as

"That very hour Zen Zenah SENT MEN after Muttalib and called him; and he entertained him like a brother."—Taxallud Nāma'h.

- 293. The first and second persons plural are the same as the third person masculine singular, with the plural form of pronouns prefixed; but the third person masculine plural is formed by merely prefixing the; to the simple infinitive, as in the two examples just given.
- 294. Another form of the third person plural, applicable to all classes of verbs, is written with the same letters as the feminine singular, and is also the case with regard to intransitive verbs;* but the final letter is preceded by the vowel (½), which conveys a shorter sound than that of the feminine 3, and is equivalent to the diphthong w. The following extract is an example:—

- 295. The feminine form of the past tense of transitive verbs is obtained in the same manner as that of intransitives, by affixing  $(h\tilde{a}-i-\underline{kh}af\tilde{\imath})$  to the infinitive itself, which is changed to  $\mathfrak{S}$  or (-) in the plural.
- 296. Some verbs also drop the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive in the feminine singular, and substitute s  $(h\bar{a}-i-\underline{k}haf\bar{\imath})$  for the s  $(h\bar{a}-i-\underline{z}\bar{a}-hir)$  of the masculine; but not the verbs of this form. Examples of the feminine:

"The HAND of destiny and death STRUCK the drum of departure, therefore, oh my eyes, you should bid adieu to the head."—Gulistān.

"This matter was exceedingly difficult for Moses; nevertheless when HE CAST IT (his staff) down, it became a serpent. This happened by the power of the All Powerful."— $B\bar{a}b\bar{u}J\bar{a}n$ .

"The sage directed them to throw the slave into the river. After he had sunk several times, they caught him by the hair and cast him back into the boat, which HE SEIZED firmly with his hand."—Gulistān.

297. Example of the plural:

"It was in the middle of the day that they arrived near the fort. The brave fellows LAID their hands on it by the way, and in the short space of three hours they gained the victory."— Afzal Khān.

298. Some infinitives have more than one method of forming the past tense, and applicable both to masculine and feminine; as in ويل 'to speak' or 'to say.' Examples:

"When he (Mīrmāmī) delivered up Durkhāna'ī to him, a man who was á servant of Gūjar  $\underline{Kh}$ ān's was standing by, to whom he related the circumstance, on which Gūjar  $\underline{Kh}$ ān discharged an arrow at Mīrmāmī, but it did not take effect.— $\underline{Adam\ Kh}$ ān and  $\underline{Durkh}$ āna'ī.

"The Queen SPOKE to her mother clandestinely;

And with this circumstance, also, she acquainted Badrī.'---Saif-ul-Mulūk.

299. Form II. consists of the infinitives of Classes III., IV., and X., which form the past tense by merely rejecting the J of the infinitive and prefixing the particle; as exemplified by the following extracts:

"In my life-time thou didst thus PUT ME OUT of thy remembrance, Like as one forgetteth a deceased person of a hundred years."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"When Abū Bakr made an exhortation, they all TOOK his ADVICE, acted up to it, and became resolute in it."—Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

300. The plural of Form II. of the past is derived in the same manner as Form I. Examples:

* This latter form is more properly speaking the imperfect tense, but used for the past. See paragraph 323.

"After forty days they came into the presence of the King,
And made their statement to him in a humble manner—
'We have SEARCHED through SEVEN REGIONS with great care,
And seven generations of every person has been inspected.

There will be a daughter born to Shahbāl, son of Shāh Rukh:
Her name is Badrī Jamāl—the Sovereign of the Fair."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

301. Some of the infinitives of Classes III. and X. ending in عن, which are contained in Form II. of the past tenses, insert a before the final letter for the third person masculine singular, which is changed to I for the plural, the then taking an affixed (ع) or s; as کتل 'to behold,' ځوت 'he beheld,' ځوت 'they beheld.' Examples:

"Sāæid saw that the prince was not seated on the throne;
And in his mind this matter he passed over."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

"The Goldsmith saw that his sweetheart cometh, and He went out to receive her, delighted and overjoyed."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

302. The infinitives which constitute Form II. of the past use s for the feminine singular termination, affixed to the masculine or to the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive indiscriminately, which is changed to  $\mathfrak{S}$  or  $(\neg)$  in the plural.

"With all speed не there repeated the invocation,
And he breathed on the fair face of the beloved."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

"My mother said unto me—'Thy grandfather divides the propitiatory offering of dates; go there: therefore I came and took up a date.—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"He placed ten thousand men under each commander,
And then he DEMANDED BOATS from the boatmen.—Saif-ul-Mulūh.

303. Form III. The infinitives of Classes XI. and XIV. form the past tense by rejecting the J of the infinitive and prefixing the particle; as in the preceding Form, with the exception that the last letter of the root is accented or moveable in this, whilst it is quiescent in the former.

"When Durkhāna'ī HEARD THIS REPLY with her ears, she became faint and powerless; she sighed, and became (as it were) blind and deaf.— $Adam \ \underline{Kh}$ ān and Durkhāna'ī.

"He said—' beneath the shadow of the wealth of royalty I KEPT ALL but the envious, pleased and contented, but they did not become satisfied."  $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

304. The feminine terminations of the infinitives of this Form are s or  $(\angle)$  for the singular, and  $\mathfrak{S}$  or  $(\neg)$  for the plural. Examples:

"In the morning, when her father beheld her, he came to his son-in-law, and ASKED him about it, saying:

'Oh rascal! how sharp are those teeth of thine? To what extent wilt thou stretch her lips? they are not leather!'"— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

"When the nurse HEARD THIS SPEECH from him,

They at length departed from their own house."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

"When the nurse HEARD from her such singular and uncommon words,

She became amazed at the circumstance, and perplexed as to its remedy."—Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

- 305. By far the greater number of infinitives in the language form their past tenses according to one of the three Forms already explained, for which reason I have given pretty numerous examples of them. The infinitives of the remaining Forms, being few in number comparatively, will not require so many examples to illustrate them.
- 306. Form IV. These obtain their past tenses in a similar manner to the verbs of Form II. by rejecting the J of the infinitive, the last characteristic letter being immovable or quiescent, but with this difference, that they altogether reject the of the past, by which there is no difference in the mode of writing between the past and the imperfect; thus برانت 'to unloose,' پرانت 'he unloosed;' بوت 'to take away,'*

"With hands folded on navel he stood before him in a respectful manner.

And in commendation of the king his Tongue he unlosed.—Saif-ul-Mulük.

"Sardāsī'ā unloosed her brother's bonds, which Bahrām with much skill had fastened."

—Bahrām Gūr.

- "With much distress and suffering they TOOK US AWAY to the prison, And treated us with much impropriety and disrespect."—Suif-ul-Mulūk.
- 307. The feminine is obtained in the same manner as that of the infinitives of the preceding Form.
- 308. Form V. drops the J of the infinitive in forming the past, the final characteristic letter being movable, and merely differs from Form I. (which see), inasmuch as it altogether rejects the prefixed غ ; as كنبينول 'to seat,' or 'make sit.'

"The young woman took the prince by the hand,

And with much pomp and grandeur Seated Him on the throne."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

309. The simple infinitive of this as well as other classes of verbs is often used for the past tense, but, in such cases, an affixed personal pronoun in the objective case is used with it, as in the following:

"He called the whole of them into the assembly,
And with much kindness SEATED THEM near himself."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

310. The feminine termination for this class of infinitives in the past is the same as for the preceding Forms. Example:

"When suddenly that BEAUTIFUL ONE, the beloved of the whole world, Was summoned to her father's presence, and SEATED by him at his side."

- Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

311. Form VI. consists of the infinitives which wholly reject the sign of the infinitive and last or final letter in the past, as سول 'to burn' or 'consume,' في سه 'te burnt.' Example:

312. Form VII. rejects the J of the infinitive and prefixes a syllable to the root, the final letter of which is quiescent. These infinitives also reject the prefixed f and are not common; as f or 'take away,' to remove' or 'take away,' he removed.' Example:

- "At last thine eyes CARRIED AWAY my HEART from me, Notwithstanding I guarded it with patience and endurance."— Eabd-ul-Hamid.
- 313. Form VIII. The past is formed by rejecting the sign of the infinitive and the prefixed;, as بايلل 'to play away' or 'lose at play,' بايله 'he played' or 'lost.' Example:

"He who hath lost his life in pleasure, hath not bought anything, but hath lost his GOLD."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

314. The past tense of the causal infinitive بايلول is often used for the past tense of بايلل, as in the following *:

"They who show enmity to the good friends of the Almighty, have lost their faith and religion, and have become accounted infidels."—Favā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

315. Form IX. The verbs of this class are formed from adjectives generally, and obtain the past tense by rejecting the زل used in their formation, as also the prefixed; of the past, and, to complete it, the past tense of کول or کول 'to do,' is required; as خښول 'to inter,' خښول 'the interred.' Example:

"Then the Prophet said, 'Show unto me hell, for thou hast filled my heart with much desire."—Majmuæāt-i-Ķandahārī.

- 316. The whole of the infinitives of this, as well as Forms VI., VII., and VIII., obtain the plural in the same manner as those before described, and take s or  $(\angle)$  for the feminine in the singular, and  $(\neg)$  or  $\mathfrak{S}$  in the plural.
- 317. Form X. The infinitives of this class use the simple infinitive with the prefixed for all three persons, both singular and plural; as خندل 'to laugh,' خندل 'he laughed,' etc. Example:

"The accursed mark was visible on his breast, and on beholding it the IMĀM LAUGHED. On this, Shimr said—'What is thy laughter at present occasioned by, now that not one grain of thy existence remaineth?'"—Hasan and Husain.

The above form of the past is also used for the feminine singular and plural.

318. Form XI. ¿, 'to do' or 'perform,' which is imperfect, and used as an auxiliary, rejects the J of the infinitive and the last radical letter in the past, and takes the prefixed; as if or if he did.' The following is an example:

"The Prophet MADE this REPLY to the lady Æā'esha'h, 'The sound of Nakīr and Munkir will fall as pleasantly on the ear of the Faithful as the application of a collyrium to one's eyes."

—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

319. The prefixed particle of the past is sometimes omitted, as in the following extract:

"Notwithstanding all the force he used to remove the Imam's hand, yet he did not undo the fastening of Imam Husain's drawers."—Hasan and Husain.

This verb does not undergo change in termination for gender or number.

320. or & is often affixed to the third person singular and plural of the past tense of verbs, particularly in religious writings, or at the termination of a line in poetry, for the sake of euphony; thus—

"After that Æumar bin Saæd, who was a champion, and computed amongst the army of the Yezīdīs, with great wrath STRUCK HIM with a mace, and SEPARATED the head of that youth from his body."—Husan and Husain.

321. After having explained the past tense so fully, the imperfect is easily described.

The different methods of obtaining the imperfect may be divided into six classes.

322. I. Out of the twenty-four classes of transitive verbs, fifteen form the past by prefixing the j, and the imperfect tenses of the whole of these are obtained by merely rejecting that prefix; as יוֹג 'to bind,' לַ יוֹג ' ine bound,' יוֹג ' ine bound,' לַ יוֹג ' ine was binding.' The following extracts are examples:

"He was searching about for him every here and there, Until at last he found the prince quite beside himself."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

يو له بخوانو بادشاهانو په کار د بادشاهي کښي ډيرد سستي کوله او لښکر ئي تل تتله په سختي لار . One of the kings of old was extremely negligent in affairs of state, and USED TO KEEP " his army in arrears."—Gulistān.

323. ويل 'to say,' which is of the above class, has a second form of the imperfect, which is also obtained by rejecting the prefix.

Sent out of heaven into this world!" — Bahrām Gūr.

324. The plural is formed according to the same rules as the past tenses already described. Example:

"All round the heavens HE WAS VIEWING flames which were taking fire from the stars, and his idols too had fallen, and were turned upside down."—Tavallud Nāma'h.

325. The feminine termination is formed in the same manner as for the past tense. Examples:

"Oh thou ignorant heart of mine! take example from the dead!

For they that used to amass wealth, went from this world, and left it behind.

To-day is conjunction: to-morrow is separation."—Mukhammas-i-Æabd-ul-Kādir.

"Stones were falling on the heads of my rivals,

When I was sprinkling the dust of thy door on my forehead."— Eabd-ul-Hamid.

326. II. The imperfect tenses of the four classes of infinitives which do not take the prefixed; are the same as the past in every way. Examples:

"The king said, 'By this command an error has been committed by me, and in a moment of anger an expression has escaped me; but under such circumstances it is necessary that thou wouldst bring* into play such reflection as may be suitable to the condition of a wise counsellor."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

"He had no inclination for eating or for drinking, Neither DID he OPEN his eyes in any manner."—Saif-ul-Mulük.

327. III. Two classes of verbs, III. and XXIV., lengthen the short vowel (_) preceding the last characteristic letter of the past for in the imperfect; as * The imperfect tense is often used in a potential as well as an habitual sense, as in this example.

'to bury,' خښول 'he buried,' خښاؤه or خښاؤه 'he was burying;' کول 'to do,' خښاوه 'he did,' کاوه 'he was doing.'

"Since they WERE BRINGING ME up to suffer the pangs of love for the Fair, Would that in my childhood my father and mother had been childless!"— Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"When thou didst make Fir'æawn\* a ruler, who in Miṣr† laid claim to divinity; the river Nīl‡ became obedient unto him, and thou for his sake didst afflict thy chosen people."  $-Bab\bar{u} J\bar{a}n$ .

328. IV. The imperfect tense of ريل 'to take away' or 'remove,' which forms its past by prefixing يو, and which differs from all the other infinitives in the language in this respect, is formed by rejecting يو in the same manner as the j in the first form.

"I saw a learned man who had become enamoured of a person, and his secret became known. Indeed he used to endure no end of injustice and cruelty, and show great forbearance and resignation."—Gulistān.

329. V. Another form of the imperfect, used in a continuative sense, is obtained by prefixing the particle & to the past tense, as exemplified by the following extracts:

"Notwithstanding I constantly weep and wail, I found no other partner in my grief than the nightingale.

I WOULD SPEAK of the circumstances of my beloved, and he WOULD LAMENT on account of the rose."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"In short, the shoemaker accepted the young prince's service, and without apprehension he used to bring him to his own house, and take him back to the palace."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

330. This prefixed a appears to be used indiscriminately with both the imperfect and past, as in the following extract, in which it is prefixed to the simple imperfect of one verb, and to the past of another, both forms conveying a continuative meaning.

* Pharoah. † Egypt. ‡ The Nile. § The Israelites.

"Howmuchsoever a person was diseased, or his sickness were even the plague or ulcers, yet he would become cured of that malady when Mūsā would fouch him with the rod; and when he would strike dried up trees with it, they would become fresh, and fruit would hang from them."— $Bab\bar{u}\ J\bar{a}n$ .

- 331. A few imperfect verbs, which have no past tense, form the imperfect, when they have one, in a similar manner to those which take ; in the past.
- 332. The terminations for the feminine gender already explained are the same for all classes of verbs.

THE COMPOUND TENSES.

PERFECT TENSE.

- 333. The compound tenses of transitive verbs are obtained in the same manner as intransitives, by adding the different tenses of the auxiliary, 'to be,' according to the gender and number of the governing noun, to the past participle of the verb conjugated.
- 334. Transitive verbs have but two forms of the past participle, which differ but slightly from each other—one affixing with its variations for gender and number to the infinitive, whilst the other rejects the ل of the infinitive and affixes it to the root; thus يوښتيدلي 'to ask,' پوښتيدلي 'asked;' سولي 'to burn,' سوي 'burnt.'
- 335. There are consequently but two forms of the perfect tense formed by adding the present tense of the auxiliary 'to be,' to the past participles, and therefore a few examples will serve to illustrate it.

"The scorpion said, Oh brother! the fear produced in my heart from crossing this water, HATH THROWN ME into the whirlpool of perturbation."—Kalīlah no Damnah.

"This unembellished firmament became adorned with ornaments and embellishments; Which the diamonds of omnipotence and power have carved."—Mīrzā Khān, Anṣārī.

"I have perused a hundred volumes on patience, and endurance,
But what shall I do? I am out of patience, and distracted in heart."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

336. The participle and auxiliary assume the feminine form and number to agree with a governing noun of that gender; as—

"That from which even Majnūn was appalled in the grave, Love HATH ASSIGNED such a grievous calamity unto me."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"I наче ентиятер unto thee both my destiny and inclination; In every way I will be the most humble of thy lovers."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

337. The auxiliary is often rejected in this tense, as in the following extract:*

"Thou art the apple of my eyes, and that eamel on which thou art mounted, together with the goods loaded on it, I have given unto thee."—Tawallud Nāma'h.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

338. This tense is formed in the same manner as the preceding, from the past or perfect participle, to which it adds the past tense of the auxiliary 'to be.' Examples:

"I had not as yet taken the name of friendship

When separation again assembled an army against me."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"At any time whatsoever, the Prophet над never Performed any acts of enchantment, neither над he ever spoken falsehoods in his life-time."—Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

339. Examples of the feminine:

"Dammah said, 'A certain tortoise had acquaintance with a scorpion, and one with another used to breath the breath of unity and concord; and they HAD moreover LAID the foundation of friendship and affection." "—Kalīlah no Damnah.

"At this dialogue Muttalib became much terrified, for by unseen hands swords had been DRAWN, and were gleaming all around him."—Tunallad Nāma'h.

340. This tense is also obtained from the past participles and the agrist tense of the auxiliary, 'to be,' for which there is but one form, which remains unchanged, in all six inflections, for both genders. Examples:

* Also see paragraph 240.

"What inquiry makest thou respecting Durkho and Adam Khān?

A person in his life-time MAY HAVE CLAD himself in a shroud. - Kāsim Zalī, Afrīdī.

"Until he MAY not HAVE BEEN SHOD with the shoe of madness,

The foot of every noble steed becometh rubbed on the ground of love."— Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

"The amount of my sorrows will be within the computation of that man, Who may have counted over every hair of hisown body."— Eabd-ur-Rahmān.

341. Another form of this tense is obtained by using the 2nd future tense of the auxiliary, 'to be,' affixed to the past participle, as in the following examples:

"No one in the whole course of his life WILL HAVE BEHELD

The trials imposed upon me every hour by my beloved."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"The learned man by way of apology gave answer unto him, saying, 'My notice has never been drawn towards Durkhāna'ī. If I knowingly мау наче астер unkindly towards her, may the Almighty make my eyes sightless."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

342. The inflections of the conditional tense of the auxiliary 'to be,' with the past participle and a conditional conjunction or adverb of wishing, gives the past conditional or optative tense. The auxiliary is not subject to change in termination for either gender or number, but the participle is liable to both. Examples:

"If thou also hadst seen in the same manner what I have beheld, perhaps thou too wouldst have fled from their oppression into the desert."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

"IF thy heart HAD FOUND any quiet in truth and sincerity, Thou wouldst not have bestowed adulation or flattery on any one."-- Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"Had my heart but been aware of such sorrows as these,
I would never have taken even the name of friendship."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"I would not for a moment have selected absence,

HAD any one PLACED death and separation for me to choose between."—Zabd-ur-Raḥmān.

- 343. The twenty-four classes of transitive verbs have twelve methods of forming the present tense, the whole of which differ materially from each other.
- 344. Form I. This consists of the infinitives of Classes I., II., V., XVII., XVIII., XX., XXI., and XXIV., and constitutes the greatest number of verbs in the language, which obtain the present by merely rejecting the  $\mathcal{J}$  of the infinitive and affixing the necessary personal pronouns. Examples:

"A pampered son taketh not to discipline and morality,
And a shaded palm giveth not ripe dates."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

"I profitlessly place a load on my head for the sake of carnal desires,

But my waist never becometh bent for devotion or for prayer."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

345. Form II. comprises the infinitives of Class III., in which the two last radical letters are rejected and two others taken in lieu of them; as فوښتال 'to rive' or 'cleave,' مسكنيتل 'he, she, it demands;' سكنړي 'to rive' or 'cleave,' مسكنړي

"Through dread I am unable to look on the host of her beauty—

Her eyebrows are bows! her eyelashes RIVE coats of mail!"—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

346. Form III. In forming the present tense of the verbs of this division, which includes Class IV. of infinitives, the two last characteristic letters are rejected and another taken in place of them; as مؤدي 'to find,' مؤدي 'he, she, it found.' Examples:

"She made this request to her father, saying, 'All those of my own age LEARN TO READ, give directions that I may learn to read also."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

"There are many extrinsic friends in the world,
But Raḥmān findeth not a friend of the heart."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

347. Form IV. includes the infinitives of Classes VI. and XIII., which lengthen the first short vowel (—) into I for the present; as وائيي 'to speak,' وائيي 'he, she, it, etc. speaks;' ثاري 'to weep,' خندل 'he, she, it, etc. weeps;' ثاري 'he, she, it laugh,' خندل 'he, she, it laughs.' Example:

I LAUGH and WEEP, but I do not tell my perplexed state to any one."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

348. Form V. This includes the infinitives of Class VII., and is something similar to the one immediately preceding. It changes the short vowel (ع) for in the present; as بلل 'to call' or 'name,' بولى 'he, she, it, etc. called.' Example:

"Thou CALLEST God the giver of daily bread, nevertheless consider it acquired by employment; Yet with all this knowledge, thou termest thyself grateful."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

349. Form VI. comprises Classes VIII. and IX. of infinitives, which reject the last radical letter and take another in place of it; as وثرني 'to kill,' وثرني 'he, she, it wills;' پرانشي 'to unloose,' پرانشي 'to unloose,' پرانشي

"What between thy eyes and thy eyelashes, I am perplexed and bewildered; For one KILLS me with red fire, the other with sparkling glances."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

350. Form VII. The infinitives of Class X. form the present by rejecting the three last radical letters and taking another in their place; as يشتل 'to discharge,' 'he, she, it, etc. discharges.' Example:

"So true doth she discharge the arrows of her eyelashes,

That no one escapeth with safety from the battle with her."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

351. Form VIII. The present tense of Class XI. of infinitives is obtained by rejecting altogether the two last characteristic letters of the root, and the J of the infinitive; as آرویدل 'to hear,' آرویدل 'he, she, it, etc. heard.' Example:

"When I HEAR the sound of her dog's voice, I become as delighted,

As one becometh merry and glad at the melody of the rebeck."— ${\it Eabd-ur-Rahm\bar{a}n}.$

352. Form IX. The verbs of Class XII. contained in this form of the present reject the last radical letter and the ل of the infinitive; as ببرندل 'to recognize,' 'he, she, it, etc. recognizes.' Example:

"And if the other sayeth unto him, 'I do not recognize the will of the Almighty;' or, 'In this place the will of God availeth not;' or, 'The influence and power of God extendeth not here;' he becometh a blasphemer."—Favā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

353. Form X. The infinitives constituting Class XIV. of transitive verbs change the final letter for another in forming the present tense, similar to those of Form VI., but so far differ inasmuch as the former contain but two letters in the root and the latter three. Example:

"The grass which moveth not from its proper place acquireth moisture;

Then wherefore scourest thou the world in search of thy daily bread?"—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

354. Form XI. Class XIX. of infinitives form the present tense by rejecting the last radical letter of the root for two others; as نبول 'to knead,' أبيل 'to knead,' أبيل 'he, she, it, etc. kneads;' بيول 'to take' or 'bear away,' بياري 'he, she, it, etc. takes.' Example:

"If I TAKE the steed of the heart on the road of carnal desire,

He goeth not along, for my heart's reflection made him lame."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

355. Form XII. The verbs of Class XXIII. form the present tense by affixing an extra letter to the root, after rejecting the sign of the infinitive; as نول 'to burn,' 'he, she, it burns.' Example:

" Fire BURNS whatever may be cast into it;

In the same manner, a seeker after this world will not become satiated."

- Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

356. It is here necessary to mention that the infinitive کول 'to do,' included in the above, has two other forms of the third person, besides the regular one, viz. and V or خابد examples of which are contained in the following extracts:

" Alas! Christians exercise dominion over Hindūstān!

Oh! where are those valorous swordsmen gone?

Shopkeepers are now becoming soldiers in India,

And the great and noble of the land ASK for alms."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.*

* The Afridis of the present day do not seem to have a more favourable opinion of the "shopkeepers" than our friend Käsim Æali in the last century.

"Whosoever Placeth his hopes on the fabric of this world, Voyageth on the ocean in a paper boat."— Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

357. The above form is often written with  $\stackrel{\smile}{\smile}$ , thus—

"If the monarch макети a boast of the imperial treasure, Lovers will make a boast of the cheeks of their beloved."— Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

358. The affixed  $\zeta$  or  $\omega$ , already described as being occasionally added, by way of euphony at the end of a line for the other tenses, is also used with the present. Example:

"Act not as he says, for the whole of his advice and counsel is delusive and wrong. Sin is his snare—the fowler of the Faithful—and MAKETH them SLIP and slide in many ways."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

AORIST TENSE.

- 359. The agrist or future indefinite tense of transitive verbs is formed in a similar manner to that of the intransitives already described, but they have also some peculiarities of their own.
- 360. I have before remarked respecting the intransitive verbs, that, properly speaking, this tense is an original one, and that the present is formed from it by rejecting the prefixed j, whilst the present tense of those which reject this particle is the same as the agriculture.
- 361. There are four different forms of the agrist, which I shall describe separately.
- 362. I. Thirteen out of the twenty-four classes of transitives—I., III., IV., VI., VII., VIII., XI., XIII., XIV., XIX., XXI., XXII., and XXIII., merely differ from the present by taking the prefixed j, as will be seen from the following examples:

"Every recluse who may begin a life of devotion without a guide or director, In the imagination of Khūshhāl Khat'ak, is but an empty pod."—Khūshhāl Khān.

"Though I мау веного with mine eyes an hundred wrongs at thy hand, Yet I shall never become convinced of thy injustice and cruelty."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"The world is a place of filthiness and impurity. You should keep your minds at a distance from it, that you may never fall head downwards into it."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

363. The prefixed j of this class of infinitives is often rejected as redundant, like the  $\psi$  of the Persian. The following is an example:

"We are hopeful that, through the blessing of veracity and candour, both of us MAY OBTAIN redemption from the talon of grief and anxiety."—Kalīlah no Damnah.

364. II. Six classes of infinitives—V., IX., X., XVI., XVII., and XX., entirely reject the prefixed j in the agrist, and therefore this form of the verb does not differ from the simple present in mode of writing. Examples:

"If I should stake and lose my head on love, then what blame is it of mine?

If тнет should stake their heads on thy esteem, what cause of grief is it to them?"

—Ahmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"Come now, that WE MAY ABANDON the sorrow and trouble of the world! That after a good fashion we may warm this companionship with wine!"

-Saif-ul-Mulūk.

365. III. The transitive infinitives of Class II., which are formed from adjectives by the addition of راد بادول ,† require the acrist tense of کول and کول 'to do,' 'to perform,' to complete them; as in the following examples of زبادول 'to prove:'

"Like the moon, fate breaketh on the head to-morrow,

The wallet of any one which IT MAY FILL to-day."— **Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

"That friend and companion of mine, alas! is now no more,
That by him I MIGHT PROVE the sincerity and truth of friendship."

-Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

366. The verb کول 'to do,' as before mentioned, besides the regular form, has two other forms of the present for the third persons singular and plural. One of these, written خرج , or خرج , is also used with the addition of the necessary affixed pronouns and the prefixed; in all the inflections of the aorist, both singular and plural, as well as the regular form of the tense. Example:

"He who MAY CONFESS with his tongue, and MAY truly VENERATE in his heart, Saying, 'I have acknowledged the One God, and the holy Prophet has been sent'—Verily, he becometh a Musalmān, and the Musalmān is an orthodox man."

-Rashīd-ul-By'ān.

عند . 367. کاند, the other form of the third person present, is also used for the aorist. but merely in the third persons, and with or without the prefixed : Examples:

"The Mu'ætazilas* have said, that Musalmāns who MAY COMMIT an enormous sin, will doubtless depart from their faith, but it will not constitute blasphemy, and they cannot be termed either Infidels or Believers."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"The brightness and lustre, will become world-conquering like the sun,
Of every brow, which candour and probity MAY ILLUMINE."— Eabd-ul-Hamid.

- 368. This tense, like the corresponding one for the intransitives, merely differs from the agrist in the mode of writing the third persons singular and plural, which take the prefixed  $\varphi$ , the peculiar sign of the 1st future, and the third persons of the imperative mood.
  - 369. There are three forms of this tense, which differ slightly from each other.
- 370. I. The regular verbs which take the prefixed; in the acrist, merely prefix the 2 to it for the 1st future. Example:

"He should perform the ablutions anew; still, washing the whole body is much better. He should also take two clean cloths, which may be either quite new or washed, one of which he should wrap round the loins, and the other he should throw over his shoulders."—
Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

as already described,† which require the assistance of کول or کول or کول 'to do,' in forming their different tenses, do not generally take the prefixed; in this tense, as in the following example:

"Moreover, it is incumbent on every believer, that HE SHOULD LEARN by heart these few words, that he may thereby strengthen his faith."— $Ma\underline{kh}zan$   $Afg\underline{h}\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

372. III. The different forms of the agrist of كول 'to do,' are used with the prefixed ع of the third persons, for the 1st future also, either with or without the prefixed ;; as—

"Day and night HE SHOULD worship and adore; HE SHOULD abandon all sin and disobedience; HE SHOULD ever give good counsel to his heart; and SHOULD keep himself according to the law. He should make observation to-day, for to-morrow is separation."

-Mukhammas of Æabd-ul-Kādir.

"If a man in the constant habit of praying may become afflicted with sickness, and it may be difficult for him to stand up,

This is the order unto him, that HE SHOULD SAY his prayers sitting."—Rashīd-ul-By'ān.

373. The second person of the imperative is sometimes used with the  $\varphi$  prefixed for the 1st future, as in the following extract:

"In the hope of what pleasant thing art thou in the time of youth free from care?

MAY the Almighty REMOVE THEE! oh thou ignorant Panjābī Jatt."—Mīrzā Khān, Anṣārī.

374. The termination  $\odot$  or  $\omega$ , previously described, is added to this as well as the other tenses of verbs for the third person, for the sake of euphony. Example:

"It is stated in the Sharah Tanbīh, that it is right on the part of the relations and neighbours of the defunct person, that THEY SHOULD SEND victuals to his family."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

2nd Future Tense.

375. The 2nd future tense of transitive verbs, of which there are four classes, is obtained from the different forms of the agrist by the addition of the prefixed  $\omega$ , and are as follow:—

376. I. Regular infinitives which take the prefixed; for the agrist; as—

"You brothers will go in search of game, and will be so much taken up with your sport,
That YOU WILL PUT him altogether OUT of your minds, and will become incautious regarding him.
Then some old wolf will whet his fangs on him, and will tear his tender limbs asunder."

- Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

377. The regular infinitives in this as well as in the agrist sometimes reject the prefixed ;; as—

378. The نب of this tense sometimes precedes the غ, and vice versû, and depends on whether a regular personal pronoun (ضمير منفصل) as well as an affixed pronoun (ضمير منصل) be used, or the regular personal pronoun omitted at the beginning of a sentence. If the former, the نب should immediately precede the غ, and, when no regular personal pronoun is used, the غ should precede the نب.

"He said thus unto him, 'On the great day of resurrection, when the Almighty shall make inquiry concerning justice;

I WILL INQUIRE of thee, oh! Sāleḥ, son of Ḥamīd, regarding the equity and beneficence shown to the whole nation."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

"Until he may not have become immersed like the rose in his own blood,

HE WILL not BEHOLD thy blooming rose-coloured cheek."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

379. II. Infinitives, in other respects perfect, which reject the prefixed; in the past tense, also reject it in the agrist, and consequently in the 2nd future also. Example:

"In the first place, my concern is, as to whether at the time of death I shall bear away my faith, or whether I shall lose it."— $Fan\bar{a}id-u\underline{sh}-\underline{Sh}ar\bar{i}'aa'h$ .

380. Compound infinitives formed by prefixing a preposition or postposition to a simple verb, such as پریښول 'to place,' کښییستل 'to place,' etc., also reject the وُ and insert the &, the peculiar sign of the tense, between the preposition or postposition and the verb, as in the following:

"'I certainly WILL NOT RELINQUISH the punishment agreeable to the laws.' The Darwesh said, 'You command truly, nevertheless, he who stealeth part of any property devoted to pious uses, it is not lawful to cut off his hand.'"—Gulistān.

381. III. Infinitives formed from adjectives, nouns, or pronouns, by adding رُل require the aid of کړل or کړل or کړل it do,' in this as well as the other tenses, and consequently are subject to the same rules as those verbs in forming the 2nd future tense; thus—

"The young maiden said, 'Oh, youth! wherefore hast thou come here?

This is an infidel, and HE WILL BREAK all thy bones!"—Bahrām Gūr.

"How long shall I endure sorrow? There is no remedy found for this!

And therefore I will cut my throat with a sharp sword."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

382. IV. The infinitive کول 'to do,' chiefly used as an auxiliary to other verbs, particularly those of Form III. just described, prefixes the عبد to its different forms of the agrist for the 2nd future. Examples:

"What answer SHALL I, Raḥmān, GIVE unto my beloved?
What reply is there from the dead unto the living?"—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"Green parrots and nightingales fly about the parterre in disorder and tumult,

But the autumn will now soon arrive, and WILL DISORDER the garden for them."

— Æabd-ul-Kādir.

IMPERATIVE Mood.

- 383. The imperative of transitive verbs like that of the intransitives is not subject to change in termination for gender, and has no first person singular or plural. It merely differs from the agrist and 1st future as regards the pronominal affixes and the prefixed  $\varphi$ , which is also the sign of the third person of the latter tense.
  - 384. There are four descriptions of the imperative, which may be thus defined—

I. Regular infinitives which take the prefixed; in the past and agrist tenses, also use it in the imperative; thus—

"Then Aurang said, 'GIVE EAR unto me!

HEAR the account of the battle from me, oh my guest!" -Bahrām Gūr.

Like the  $\leftarrow$  of the Persian imperative, the regular infinitives in Pushto often reject the prefixed; as in the following example:

"If a person enquireth—who is most discreet? say it is he Who placeth not his affections on any one save the Creator."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

385. II. Infinitives which totally reject the j in the past and acrist, also do away with it in the imperative, as—

"Yakūb said, 'Depart and enjoy yourselves by roaming in the forest, But do not take Yūsuf from me; for this matter is afflicting to me."

- Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

386. The imperative mood of compound infinitives also belong to this form, as—

"The stranger Leave out of the question, for verily, even though it may be a mother or father, Let it not happen that any one may be in need of the help of others."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

387. III. Like the corresponding forms for the agrist and future tenses, the infinitives derived from adjectives, etc. require the assistance of کول or کول 'to do,' in forming the imperative. Example:

"Again, for the second time, Badra'h Khātūn said, 'Oh sister!

If thou hast any gratitude for thy mother's milk,

One time, at least, snow thy face unto thy afflicted lover;

For he has performed many toils and troubles both by sea and land."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

388. Some of these infinitives have also another form of the imperative, for the second person plural, in which the last radical letter of the regular imperative is changed into , as will be seen in the following examples:

"Go to him quickly, and TRANSMIT information regarding him;
And with all possible speed bring him into my presence."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

"The king commanded, saying, 'Bring you some more victuals, And satiate this demon in a proper manner."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

389. IV. The infinitive کول ' to do,' is somewhat irregular in the imperative, having کری ', or کو for the second person singular, and کوئی with the necessary personal pronouns, for the third person singular and plural. کوئی is changed into کوئی for the plural of the second person. Examples:

"Bring tidings, oh fragrant zephyr of the morning!

GLADDEN the rose of my heart in the blooming garden!"—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"Do battle with the enemy, oh my son! do not retreat from them, so it behoveth."—Hasan and Husain.

390. The prefixed j is sometimes retained and at times rejected.

THE POTENTIAL MOOD.

قيغة امكاني بريغة امكاني بريغة المكاني

- 391. The Pushto has no regular potential mood, and the passive form of the verb is used instead, with a slight difference in the construction.
  - 392. There are but three tenses—the present, past, and future.

INTRANSITIVES.

- 393. Intransitive verbs have no passive voice, but a passive form—the different past participles with the auxiliary 'to be'—is used for the potential of intransitives. The verb agrees with the agent, and the masculine or feminine form of the past participle must correspond accordingly; but the third persons of the past tense of the auxiliary, like all intransitive verbs, alone has a different termination for the feminine gender.
- 394. Therefore, whenever the passive form of an intransitive verb is met with in a sentence, it can be instantly recognised as the potential mood. The following are examples:

PRESENT TENSE.

ستا د عشق له موج که هیچ لوري وتي نه شم دواړه لاس مي پرواته د عقل په لانبو کښي

"From the waves of thy love I CANNOT ESCAPE by any road:

Both my hands have become powerless for the swimming of wisdom."

-Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

PAST TENSE.

"I COULD NOT OVERLOOK even a straw or a splinter;
But love hath made me disregard both life and goods."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

FUTURE TENSE.

"If, through your rank, some mode of livelihood be established for me which may cause peace of mind, I SHALL not BE ABLE to emerge from the debt of gratitude as long as I live."—Gulistān.

TRANSITIVES.

395. The transitive form of the potential is easily distinguished from the passive voice, as both the agent and the object must be expressed for the former; whilst, in the latter, the agent is never expressed, or remains unknown. The verb also agrees with the object in gender and number for the former, and the agent must be in the instrumental or agent case in the past tense. The object is sometimes put in the dative, as is also the case with regard to a few infinitives which require it.

JL PRESENT TENSE.

"In the same manner as an armless sleeve CANNOT DO anything,
So without grace and favour, man is confounded and perplexed."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

PAST TENSE.

"A holy man hath said, 'To-day that you are able to do, you do not understand; and when you understand, you are unable to perform: and in the same manner, WHEN I COULD NO, I did not comprehend; and when I comprehended I could not represent."—Katīlah no Damnah.

FUTURE TENSE.

"Thou WILT not BE ABLE TO BEAR the burthen of trust, Therefore travel light on the road of integrity, thou inexperienced one!"

-Mīrzā Khān, Anṣārī.

THE PASSIVE VOICE.

ميغه مجهول sīghah-i-majhūl.

- 396. The passive voice of a verb is called جبول, from the Arabic word signifying 'unknown,' as the agent is never mentioned.
- 397. Transitive verbs, alone, have a proper passive voice, which is obtained by prefixing the different forms of the past participle to the auxiliaries کیدل or 'become,' as in the following examples:

PRESENT TENSE.

"It is stated in the Hujjat-ul-Islām, that if a person lighteth a place of worship with lamps, HE IS ever FORGIVEN the sins of seventy thousand years."—Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"Every stone and every clod of earth of this world which is seen, All are skulls, some of kings and some of beggars."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

"One day the Shāh Nāma'h of Ferdowsī was being read in his assembly, on the subject of the decline of the dominion of Zohāk, and on the prosperity of that of Ferīdūn."—Gulistān.

"It so happened that they were apprehended at the door of a certain city on suspicion of being spies, and were placed together in a chamber, and its door was closed up on them."—
Gulistān.

PERFECT TENSE.

"If thou плят not весоме вель to the world before death, Count, oh fool! as false and futile, all thy devotion and austerity."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

درویش لره په درست عمر کښي زوي ورکړي شَوي نه وُه وُ ویل که څښتن تعالي زوي لا لرد راکړي بي له دي خرقي چه مي آغستیده نور هر څه څما په مِلک کښي وي قربان د درویشان دي "During the whole of the Darwesh's life no son had been given unto him. He said, If the Almighty bestoweth a son on me, save this ragged garment which I have clothed myself in, whatever else may be in my possession is an oblation to the poor."—Gulistān.

2ND FUTURE TENSE.

"No one should (uselessly) place a snare on the highway of this world:

The griffin and the phoenix WILL NOT BECOME the PREY of any one."— Habd-ur-Rahmān.

AORIST TENSE.

"His father said unto him, 'Oh, son! whatever matter thou art acquainted with, do thou also state." He said unto him, 'I fear I MAY BE ASKED concerning that with which I am not familiar."—Gulistān.

Doubtful Past Tense.

"Third—that man who MAY HAVE BEEN REMOVED from his office or situation, and who may have no hope of obtaining it again."—Kalīlah no Damnah.

PAST CONDITIONAL TENSE.

"Would to God that this son from non-existence had not come into being! that my love and affection had not been placed on him! and this weasel had not been unjustly killed on his account!"—Kalīlah no Damnah.

398. There is another method of forming the passive voice by using the imperfect tense of verbs with the auxiliaries, but it is peculiar to the transitive verbs, and is not used in forming the compound tenses of the passive. For the singular, the third person is used for all three persons, and the third person plural for the plural forms. The following are examples:

PRESENT TENSE.

"The agony of death, although it is called so bitter and so sharp;

Yet, by the help of thy sweet lips, it is the water of immortality."—Labd-ur-Rahmān.

"The whole of these eight qualities (of God) are called natural, and together with the essence itself, are termed primitive and pristine."—Fanā id-ush-Shari æa'h.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

تردِ حدَ دوي كاته دو بمكاريد شه كنه يس شه شاه و مصرته كردان

"They continued to look towards him as long as he was being seen, After which the king set out on his return to Egypt."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

2nd Form for the مدامي or Continuative Tense.

"They will say, 'Our practices were, that we used to be present in the mosque at such a time, that there we always used to hear the calls to prayer."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"The king became enraged and ordered a solution of the matter. So the messenger was seized and the epistle was read."— $Gulist\bar{a}n$ .

2ND FUTURE TENSE.

"After death an account WILL BE REQUIRED from every man, According to the number of the sins of this world."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

AORIST TENSE.

"If such a speech MAY BE HEARD from any person, on which certain blasphemy ariseth, it is not necessary to adjudge it as such on that account alone; for it may have fallen from him unintentionally, or perhaps he may not understand its signification; and therefore he does not become a blasphemer on that account."—Fanā'īd-ush-Shari'æa'h.

"Before friendship ariseth, were but absence to be seen,

No servant of God would become mixed up in the matter."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

399. Both forms of the passive are occasionally to be met with in the same sentence; thus—

"Or if he thus sayeth, In buying and selling until falsehood is not spoken no profit is OBTAINED,' or if he sayeth that 'there is no expedient save in falsehood and perfidy,' in order that that which is unlawful in the sight of God be considered trivial and trifling, he becometh a blasphemer."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

- 400. After this lengthened analysis of the Pushto verbs, it will be advisable to give a table of the moods and tenses according to the arrangement with which the European learner will be best acquainted; although the Arabic method, which is the same as the Hebrew, is by far the most simple; and I imagine that few will commence Pushto who are unacquainted with Persian, and the primary rules of the Arabic Grammar which are necessary in the study of it.
- 401. It will be more particularly requisite to give a table of all the moods and tenses of a few imperfect and irregular intransitive verbs, on account of the varieties which they assume, and in order that they may serve as models for others; but I shall retain the simpler method in the conjugations of the regular transitives and intransitives.
- 402. Conjugation of the irregular imperfect intransitive verb راغلل rāghlal, 'to come.'

نهي و نهي nafī no nahī.

410. To signify negation and prohibition, the particles & nah and & mah are used with the verbs; but, as their position depends on the description of the infinitive with which they are used, it will be necessary to give a table of each. The third persons singular and plural of a few of the infinitives already conjugated will be sufficient for the purpose.

- The particle of prohibition & is alone used with the second persons of the imperative mood, and invariably precedes the inflection of the verb with which it is used, whatever its description.
- Infinitives, such as راويل 'to come,' يريوتل 'to fall,' رافيل, 'to bring,' and 'to cut,' which have a prefixed particle, place the نه after the latter both in the past and present tenses.

CHAPTER VII.

THE SEPARATE PARTICLES.

بروف إurūf.

417. Under this head are included adverbs, postpositions, prepositions, conjunctions and interjections. They contain, besides pure Afghān, a number of Arabic and Persian words.

ADVERBS.

- 418. The Adverbs may be divided into fourteen different classes; of place, time, number, quality, similitude, collection, separation, demonstration, interrogation, dubiation, exclamation, affirmation, negation, and prohibition.
  - 419. They serve to qualify nouns, and are for the most part undeclinable; thus,

"Since thy ringlets have pierced the very heart of Raḥmān, Tuerefore, from his cyclashes the white tears flow."

"If thy face becometh turned from God unto the world, it will be also turned from heaven unto hell:

Thou wilt for ever wander driven from door to door: thou wilt NOWHERE find a resting or a dwelling-place."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"When one degenerate being appeareth in a family,

He bringeth disgrace on his lineage both PRESENT and PAST."— Zabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

420. A number of adverbs are subject to the usual change in termination for the ablative case; as in the following example:

"The Wuzīr said, 'As yet this boy has not eaten any of the fruit from the garden of his own existence."—Gulistān.

421. A few adverbs derived from nouns and adjectives are liable to the same change in termination for gender, number, and case, as the nouns they qualify. Thus دير 'much,' becomes ډير in the feminine singular, and ډير in the feminine plural and the oblique cases of the singular. The masculine plural is the same as the singular, and the oblique plural for both genders is

"In love the (lover's) suit is an exceedingly difficult one—

The object can only be obtained after many twists and turnings."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

Besides the simple prepositions and postpositions used in forming the cases of nouns and pronouns, already described in Chapter III., there are other particles used in the same manner which require the noun, adjective, or pronoun, to be used in the genitive or ablative case when capable of inflection. Examples:

"The Law is like unto a tree whose roots have gone under the ground; and (if thou shouldst make use of understanding and argument) the topmost branch of it has gone up into the heavens."— $Ma\underline{kh}zan \ Af\underline{gh}\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

CHAPTER VIII.

THE DERIVATION OF WORDS.

426. There are a number of derivative and compound words in the Puśhto language, formed from nouns, adjectives, and verbs, by prefixing, affixing, or inserting certain words or letters. They may be considered pure Afghān.

NOUNS.

427. Abstract nouns may be obtained from adjectives in eight different ways: I.—By rejecting the final letter of the adjective and prefixing another; as, 'hungry' لوبر 'hungry' وبري 'hungry' وبري 'hungry' وبري

"Hunger and thirst all at once overpowered him:
In his body no power or strength remained."—Saif-ul-Mulūh.

II.—Forms the noun by rejecting two letters of the adjective for three others; thus تنک or تنده 'thirsty,' تنک or تنده 'thirsty,'

"In the contentment of the contented man, there is neither hunger nor THIRST; And they who acquire this alchemy will be nobles, tho' clad in rags."

- Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

III.—Shortening the word by the rejection of , for (-), and affixing \; as, or رنيا 'bright,' رُونِي 'bright,' رُونِي 'bright,' رُونِي

"By the LIGHT of it the business of this life cannot be perfected;
For this world is as the lightning and the light of the sky."—Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

Sometimes the word takes في, as in the following example:

"As when the sun riseth on the world, LIGHT and BRIGHTNESS cometh,
So doth friendship and affection give life to both breath and footstep."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

IV.—The middle letter of the adjective is rejected; یا inserted in its place; and ه (hā-i-khafi) or (إلى fat'ha'h affixed; as, تیار or 'black,' تیاره 'dark' or 'black,' تیاره 'dark' or 'blackness.'

"The whole world became filled with DARKNESS from this dust and vapour:
In the heavens thunder rolled, and lightning flashed as from swords."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

V.—The final letter of the adjective is inflected from s or (-) to  $(y\bar{u}-i-majh\bar{u}l)$  or (-) kasra'h, and (-) sor (-) affixed; thus, (-) good, (-) (-) goodness.'

"Journeying on this road is difficult to the fickle and capricious:

Consider him a man who layeth the foundation of GOODNESS."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

The whole of the nouns of the preceding classes are feminine; and the following, with the exception of those formed by affixing ولي, and ولي, which are feminine, are all masculine.

VI.—This form is something similar to the fourth, being formed from the same adjective (which however remains unchanged) and merely takes the affix والتي; thus, 'black,' كلك 'hardness.' The final letter 'black,' كلك والتي 'hardness.' The final letter is changed to ي in the plural, similar to the first variety of nouns of 1st declension.

"Thy countenance was white like unto the sun—yea! it was brighter than the orb of day: But now, alas! it is become so black, that its blackness is like unto charcoal."

Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

VII.—The nouns of this class are formed by dropping the final في of the adjective, and affixing روندي; as, روندي 'alive' or 'existing,' روندي' ilife,' 'existence;'

'captive,' 'prisoner,' نښتني 'captivity,' 'imprisonment.' They are chiefly verbal nouns. Example:

"When shall I entertain hope for my own Existence?

Since separated from her, life itself to me is infamous."—Kāsim Æalī, Afrīdī.

VIII.—This class is formed by the mere addition of the affixes توب , توب , توب , توب , توب , توب , نالله , نالله , نالله , 'separate, 'يلتون 'separation ; غايت 'a place, 'a dwelling place, 'a home, 'a birthplace ; 'مَين 'affectionate, 'مَين 'affection,' 'love ;' نيا 'mad, 'a home, 'a birthplace ; 'satiated, 'مَين 'satiated, 'خمسور تيا 'satiated, 'خمسور تيا 'satiated, خمسور تيا 'are masculine, and those توب and توب are masculine, and those in feminine.

"Suddenly she awoke from her slumbers, her heart filled with LOVE and AFFECTION.

She sat up and gazed around, but sighed; for she beheld not her beloved one."

- Yūsuf and Zulīkhā.

"God forbid that SEPARATION should be caused between two lovers;

For in SEPARATION the lover, though healthy in body, is sick at heart."—Kāsim Æalī, Afridī.

"Whereas from her presence thou didst not acquire SATIETY, Grief on her account has now satiated thee."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

The whole of these derivatives, when capable of inflection, are subject to the same changes as other nouns.

428. Abstract nouns are obtained also from primitive nouns, by the mere addition of the affixes تيا ,توب ,والي ; thus, خلک ; thus, هلک 'a child,' هلک 'thildhood;' والي 'a man,' 'a human being,' سړي توب 'manhood,' 'humanity;' والي 'a guest,' ميلمستيا 'entertainment,' hospitality;' ورور ګلوي 'a clan,' ميلمستيا 'brotherhood;' کام ولي 'a clan,' کام ولي 'clanship.' The following are examples:

"Whoever from CHILDHOOD may not have walked in the path of modesty and morality, in the years of MATURITY virtue and piety departeth from him."—Gulistān.

"Oh son! did not I say unto thee at the time of thy departure, that the hand of BRAVERY, if empty, is bound, and the paw of LION-LIKE INTREPIDITY broken?"—Gulistān.

"He said unto him, 'O father! didst thou not eat of anything at the king's ENTERTAINMENT!"
The devotee said, 'In his sight I did not make use of anything of consequence."—Gulistān.

Arabic and Persian words, when used in this language, as may naturally be supposed, are generally governed by, and subject to, their own rules of grammar; but in some instances the Pushto affixes and prefixes may be found used with the words of those languages; thus, خفي 'generous, سخيي 'generosity;' شؤم 'niggard,' شؤم توب 'strange,' بيكان 'strangeness.'

429. Nouns of intensity are formed by prefixing adjectives to them; thus, 'dark,' prefixed to تر 'darkness,' becomes تور 'total darkness;' and in the same manner تياره signifies 'total darkness.' تر is not generally used without an adjective prefixed. Example:

"Of what consequence is it though thy countenance is enveloped in curls?

For the water of immortality itself is hidden in Total Darkness."— Eabd-ur-Rahman.

430. The particles of exaggeration and diminution used with nouns have been already described under that head (page 27-29), and need no further notice here.

ADJECTIVES.

431. Adjectives may be formed from some nouns by the addition of ي and with its different modifications for gender, as described at paragraph 45; as, بيكاني 'night,' پروني 'yesterday,' پروني 'yestern' or 'yester.' The following are examples:

"Dābshalīm, after hearing these words, related his NOCTURNAL dream to the Darwesh, and also mentioned this secret to his friend."—Kalīlah no Damnah.

"Æabdullah set out to see Muæā'wīyah, and when he inquired about the circumstances of the preceding day (Yestern), Muæā'wīyah said, 'My daughter says—Oh father! the wife of this Æabdullah is very handsome. When shall I appear to advantage in his sight? I declare unto thee that I will not have Æabdullah under these circumstances; but if he will divorce his wife, then I will accept him willingly."—Ḥasan and Ḥusain.

432. Adjectives of intensity may be obtained in the same manner as nouns of intensity by the use of particles either prefixed or affixed to the word; thus, روند 'blind,' تک سپین 'white,' تک سپین 'perfectly white,' تک سپین 'pure or spotless white.' They are subject to the same rules for gender and number as other adjectives. Examples:

"Lovers are TOTALLY BLIND to the defects and blemishes of the beloved; But do not thou also become WHOLLY BLIND to her virtues and merits."

—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

چه دِ زلفِ دَ رحمان په زړه ور څرخ کړ تر بانړو ئي اوبه څاڅي تکِّ سپينِ

"Since thou hast pierced the heart of Ralman with thy ringlets,
From his eyelashes the Pure white water flows."— Æabd-ur-Ralman.

چا چه نوري وي په خپلو وينو وللي د که شبنم په څير به تل وي سپين سپيڅلي

"Whoever may have washed his garments in his own blood,

Will, like the dew of the night, be ever spotless white."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

433. Several Persian, and a few Arabic adjectives also, are to be met with in Pushto, differing but slightly from the originals in pronunciation; for example, 'aggrieved,' from the Arabic noun غرث 'grief,' and Persian ن 'stricken;' and in the same manner مر المعرب 'treacherous,' 'malicious;' تو أو المعرب 'spoiled,' 'worthless,' from the Arabic word المعرب and Hebrew المعرب signifying 'cut short, etc.;' نام المعرب 'intrepid,' 'brave,' from the Pushto noun زده ور 'intrepid,' 'brave,' from the Pushto noun تو المعرب 'warlike,' 'gallant,' from the Afghān noun تو المعرب 'a sword,' and المعرب 'to strike,' 'to smite.' Example:

خلاص شي بيا لکه تور زن د ټول له سينځه که هر څو په غاښو و نسم زبان چپ

"The tongue again becometh liberated, like the WARRIOR from the thickest of the fight; Although I may seize it with my teeth that it should remain silent."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

434. Another description of adjective is obtained by prefixing an adjective to a noun; as, نیمه خوا 'incomplete,' 'crude,' 'disappointed,' 'foiled,' etc., from the Persian adjective نیمه خوا 'half,' and the Afghān noun خوا 'desire,' 'inclination;' thus,—

"Behold the Incomplete brightness of the lightning and be prudent!

The affairs requiring deliberation perform not with exceeding haste!"— Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

435. A few adjectives are obtained by affixing the Persian particle مند and the Pushto corruption بالي to Persian and Arabic nouns; thus, نياز 'indigence,' 'poverty,' نيازمند or نيازمند 'indigent,' 'poor;' دولت 'wealth,' نياز 'war,' 'battle,' جنگ يالي 'warlike,' جنگ يالي 'warlike,' جنگ يالي 'warlike,' جنگ يالي 'war,' 'battle,' جنگ يالي 'warlike,'

'martial;' ننگ نالي 'honor,' 'reputation,' ننگ يالي 'honorable,' 'reputable.' The letter ننه also added to Persian and Pushto nouns indiscriminately in the formation of adjectives; thus, کرمی 'a worm,' کرمی 'worm eaten;' 'pus,' 'matter,' 'purulent,' 'mattery;' بمن 'scabby;' خیج 'dirt,' 'filth,' خیج 'dirty,' 'filthy;' نامنان 'blinking,' 'purblindness,' لیچن 'a blinkard,' 'purblind.'

436. A few adjectives can be formed by compounding two nouns, as in the Persian language, but they are not very common; thus, پئي 'pretty,' 'delicate,' from پئي 'milk,' and خ' 'the face;' thus,—

"I once made inquiry from one of those who accounted himself amongst the Arabs of Baghdād, saying, 'What sayest thou in respect to the напрзоме!"—Gulistān.

437. Relative or patronymical adjectives are for the most part obtained by affixing the different modifications of روه (described at paragraph 45) in the same manner as the Persian 'yai-i-nisbut,' to nouns; thus, کابلتي kābulaey, 'a native of Kābul;' پیښاوري pekhāweraey or peśhāweraey, 'a native of Peśhāwer;' کوهستاني pekhāweraey, 'a native of the Kohistān.'

The word پښتون now applied to the Afghāns as a nation, is really an abstract noun, derived from پښ the name of the old seat of the Afghāns in the Sūlimān mountains, west of the Indus, and تون a residence, a place of birth.

In the districts bordering on the Panjāb and Kashmīr, such as Buner and Paklī, the affix والى (a Hindī word) is generally used; thus, بنيروال Bunerwāl, 'a native of Buner;' يكليوال Paklīwāl, 'a native of Paklī.' At the same time it must be remembered that this affix cannot be always applied, for we could not call a native of Peshāwer, a Peshāwerīwāl; or a native of Kābul, a Kābulīwāl, and vice versa.

438. The past participles of verbs are extensively used as adjectives in this language, both alone and with a conjunction; thus, نازولي 'pampered,' obtained from the infinitive 'to pamper,' formed by affixing 'the sign of the infinitive of active verbs, to the Persian noun; signifying 'delicacy,' 'softness,' etc.; and خم زولي 'of the same age,' 'cotemporary,' from the past participle of the verb 'to be born,' with the Persian conjunction حم 'together,' 'with,' 'similar,' 'mutual.' The following are examples:

Since my sympathizing lover and friend became cruel and sanguinary."— Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"Durkhāna'ī made a request to her father, saying, "All those of my own age learn to read; pray give directions that I also may learn to read."—Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

It should be borne in mind that these derivatives are subject to the same changes for gender, number, and case, as other nouns or adjectives under whose classes they may come.

The hāṣil-i-maṣdar of the preceding infinitives, which are intransitive, are used as nouns; but in ease of making them transitive by changing the neuter sign or intransitive  $\mathring{\omega}$  into the active or transitive termination of infinitives  $\mathring{\omega}$ , the hāṣil-i-maṣdar can then only be construed as a mode of action or manner of being, indefinite as to time, place, and sometimes even of person; thus, نيلو 'to separate,' 'causing separation;' توکو نه 'causing separation;' توکو نه 'to make grow,' نيلو نه 'causing growth or growing.' The hāṣil-i-maṣdar of a transitive infinitive terminating in يكل of which there are a few in the language and exceptions to the above rule, can be construed as a noun; thus, بنتيد نه 'to ask,' بنتيد 'inquiry.'

440. The المرحالية ism-i-hāliah or verb in its present state, similar to the present or indefinite participle of our language, is also occasionally used as a simple noun; but chiefly in the place of the infinitive. It forms the imperfect tense with the affixed personal pronouns, and appears to be the source of that form of the verb, and is obtained from the infinitive by substituting  $(h\bar{a}-i-z\bar{a}hir)$  for the final J. It is masculine, and both singular and plural, and in the oblique cases the final J is changed to J or (L), in the same manner as in the first variety of nouns of the 6th declension. Those infinitives, however, which lengthen the  $ism-i-h\bar{a}liah$  by inserting I in place of I drop it for the imperfect tense, and in the oblique cases; as I to fly, I or flight or flying, I to fly, I to fly the fly the fly that I to fly the fly that I the fly that I to fly the fly that I to fly the fly that I to fly that I the fly that I the fly that I to fly that I the fly that I the fly that I the fly that I the fly that I

This form of the verb cannot be obtained from infinitives terminating in زل, and a few infinitives on the other hand, such as زغاستل 'to run,' and ناستل 'to sit,' form both the ism-i-ḥāliah and ḥāṣil-i-maṣdar by prefixing s. In the former case, $h\bar{a}$ -i- $z\bar{a}hir$  which is masculine, and in the latter,  $h\bar{a}$ -i- $khaf\bar{i}$  which is feminine; and both are subject to the same mode of inflection as nouns of the same description.

The verbal nouns of a few infinitives, both transitive and intransitive, instead of affixing is or add وي to the root of the verb; as کويدل 'to fill,' دکورن 'filling;' to mix, ترل 'mixing' or 'intercourse;' ترل 'to bind,' ترون 'binding.' They can also be formed by merely rejecting the J of the infinitive; as کويدل 'to fill,' دکيدل 'filling.' Both forms are somewhat rare. They can be used both as the ism-i-ḥāliah, and the ḥāṣil-i-maṣdar, and also as simple nouns. See page 173. The hāṣil-i-maṣdar cannot be used as the imperfect tense.

- 441. These forms of the verb—the hāṣil or ism-i-maṣdar, and the ism-i-hāliah, are subject to certain rules in construction which, although appertaining more to the syntax of the language, require explanation here.*
- * "It now only remains to be observed that besides the infinitive, as above described, there is another species of noun in some measure resembling it, which the Arabian grammarians term on the infinitive noun. Between these two nouns, namely, the and the open and the open there is precisely the same distinction in point of sense as between the word 'drink' and the participial noun 'drinking,' when used as a general term in such an example as the following:—

'Bacchus, ever fair and ever young, Drinking joys did first ordain; Bacehus' blessings are a treasure, Drinking is the soldier's pleasure.'

"In which lines the word 'drink' might be substituted for 'drinking' without much detriment to the seuse, for 'drinking joys' mean the 'joys of drinking,' or 'drink,' and the same may be observed of all other words of the same classes; as 'grief,' 'grieving;' 'kiss,' 'kissing;' 'love,' 'loving,' etc. How, then, shall we ascertain the true character of these words? What, for instance, is 'love' as opposed to the general term 'loving?' It is certain that they are both general terms descriptive of certain sensations of delight or modes of pleasure in the mind, and as such may become either the subject or predicate of a proposition; but this explains nothing, and if we ask the Arabian grammarians for an explanation, they answer us by pointing out a mere distinction in their application. The they say, has no other government than that of any common substantive noun, but this again is controverted by the grammarians of Koofah and Baghdad, who bestow upon it the very same regimen as that of the مصدر; and even admitting the fact, which I believe to be just, it differs nothing in this particular from the infinitive of a neuter verb. The essential distinction theu, for some essential distinction there certainly is, between the infinitive and the infinitive's noun or ismo masdar, is not in my judgment simple abstraction, that is, making the one an abstract noun in opposition to the other; for, as I have observed before, they are both general or abstract terms, but rather in the idea of action or energy conveyed by the infinitive; which action Locke observes, however various, and the effects almost infinite, is all included in the two ideas of thinking and motion. These are his words, 'For action, being the great business of mankind and the whole matter about which all laws are conversant, it is no wonder that several modes of thinking and motion should be taken notice of, the ideas of them observed, and laid up in the memory and have names assigned to them; without which, laws could be but ill made, or vice and disorder repressed. Nor could any communication be well had amongst men, without such complex ideas, with names to them; and, therefore, men have settled names and supposed settled ideas in their minds of modes of action, distinguished by their causes, means, objects, ends, instruments, time, place, and other circumstances, etc.'

"The real distinction, then, between the masdar and the ismo masdar seems to be this. The ismo masdar signifies simply the name of a mode, without any reference to action or energy; the masdar denotes a more complex idea and indicates indefinitely the action, energy, or being of that mode. Love, for example, is a name assigned to a certain feeling of delight, but loving is something more, being another name by which we indicate the action or efficacy of that feeling called love; and hence we perceive the real cause of its possessing an active or transitive government, in contradistinction to the ismo masdar, which, having no reference to action, has no other regimen than that of any common substantive noun.

"Action, indeed, is applicable to every infinitive, and this the Arabian grammarians acknowledge by dividing all the verbs in the language into two general classes, which they term الأوقى that is, verbs denoting actions transitively (the actio transiens of Logicians); and verbs denoting actions inherent or inseparable (actio immanens) which we are accustomed to call neuter; and hence we perceive the propriety of the rule laid down in the Commentary, namely that the or active participle may be derived from either a transitive or intransitive verb, which is saying in other words that every action supposes an agent.

"This idea of action is conveyed in other languages by terminations, as beat-ing, etc., but in Arabic, with a few particular exceptions, there is no distinguishing mark by which we can discriminate the infinitive from the infinitive's noun, so that we

These forms of the verb are constructed in no less than nine different ways.

I.—The ism-i-masdar, as a noun, is connected as the muzāf or governing word, in the relation of the genitive case with an agent, the object being at the same time expressed in the ablative case, and the verb agreeing with the governing noun. Examples:

"Thus, the Intercourse of the sweetheart with the rival is,

As though one mix together pure and impure—holy and profane."— Zabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"From destiny there is no ESCAPE for any one,

Though he enter the sacred plain of Mekka itself."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

The entire construction changes, should the verb, which is intransitive in the preceding examples, be changed to a transitive in a past tense; the hāṣil-i-maṣdar then becomes the object, and علي and علي the مناف الله muṣāf-illeh, or words governed in each of the above examples, become the agents in the instrumental case; thus,

"The beloved formed such intercourse with the rival."

"Every one effected escape from destiny."

II.—The ism or hāṣil-i-maṣdar is used as the مخاف or governing noun, and also as the agent connected with the مخاف اليه or word governed, in the genitive case, the object being expressed in the ablative, and the verb, which is intransitive, being governed by the agent; thus,

"Although people be enclosed in armour or in helmets, or be defended by lofty fortresses; yet this protection of the Almighty hath surpassed all."— $Malhzan\ Afgh\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ .

In the event of a transitive verb in a past tense being used instead of an intransitive, as in the above example, the ism-i-maşdar as the ownld become must trust entirely to the context for the sense of either. Every participle, however, in our language when used as a general term is the just representative of an Arabic or infinitive,—I mean every active participle formed by adding the termination ing to the imperative of a verb, which seems in this case to possess a similar power to the characteristic to, and therefore it may perhaps be said that we have two infinitives; as—

'Drink-ing is the soldier's pleasure, or to drink is the soldier's pleasure,' formed by annexing ing and prefixing to to the imperative in one sense, and the 'drink,' in the other. See 'The Miut Аміг,' by Capt. A. Lockett." Notes to page 207 to 211. Calcutta, 1814.

in the genitive, and مضاف اليه in the pronoun عناف اليه would refer to the object; as,

"The PROTECTION of the Almighty protected him."

The ism-i-ḥāliah is also subject to the same rules as the ism-i-maṣdar, just explained; and although generally used as a mode of action, in this particular instance it may be used as a noun also. Example:*

"May Khizr be the doorkeeper of that gate and wall,

By which thy coming in and going out—thy entrance and thy exit take place."

—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

If the present tense of an active verb be substituted for کیږي, which is intransitive, the ism-i-ḥāliah, which was the مضاف, becomes a mere noun in construction with an auxiliary verb; and the مضاف , which was in the genitive ease, becomes the agent in the nominative, as in the following sentence:

"By which thou effectest EXIT and ENTRANCE."

The agent would of course assume the instrumental case with the verb in the past tenses.

is used in conjunction with an object in the genitive case, with the agent expressed in the same sentence, the transitive verb being governed by the object; thus,

"Thou shouldst not take amiss, beloved one, my LOOKING;
For the nightingales take flight round the rose."—Eabd-ul-Hamīd.

With an intransitive verb the ism-i-hāliah becomes the agent and the in the genitive case, and the former agent becomes the object in the ablative; as,

" My SIGHT should not view the beloved one amiss."

IV.—The ism-i-ḥāliah is connected by the genitive case as عناف to the object, an agent being neither expressed nor understood, having then a passive significateation, and the verb agreeing with the مناف. Example:

* This example has been already given for the present participle, the ism-i-haliah, for which see page 74.

"Knowing (or knowledge of) Muḥammad is a sacred duty, in this manner, that he is the Prophet of God on whom we have placed our faith."—Fanā'īd-ush-Shari'æa'h.

With the present tense of a transitive verb used in place of the auxiliary دي, the ism-i-ḥāliah as the مضاف would become the agent, and the object would be necessarily expressed, as in the following sentence:

"Knowledge of Muhammad giveth religion to the believers."

V.—The hāṣil or ism-i-maṣdar is the مضاف joined to the object by the genitive case, the agent expressed in the vocative, and the object, which is the governing the verb, as in the following extract:

"Since thou eatest the mouthful of DEPENDENCE, Oh Ḥamīd! Over one wound thou placest another wound."

If an intransitive verb be substituted for the transitive in the preceding example, the object in that would become the agent, and the hāṣil-i-maṣdar, as the مضاف بالماء, would convey the meaning of a simple noun; thus,

"Since the mouthful of DEPENDENCE may become hard."

VI.—The ism-i-maṣdar as the مضاف اليه or word governed, is connected with the مضاف in the genitive case. The agent is not expressed, and the object governs the verb. Example:

"The world is the place of acquirement, and he who has effected nothing in this, that world is the place of ejectment and expulsion. Therefore, oh men! every one of you should weep, and not account yourselves free from sorrow and affliction."—Fana'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

VII.—The ism-i-masdar as the مضاف is connected with an object—the grammatically,—in the dative case, but really in the genitive. The agent is also expressed. Example:

"All who were on the face of the earth or in the heavens were hopeful of, and dependent on him; and for his NOURISHMENT the affection of all men became manifest."—Tawallud Nāma'h.

VIII.—The ism-i-hāliah or ism-i-maṣdar, may be used as a noun in construction with an auxiliary verb, the agent being expressed, and in the nominative case, if the verb be in any other than a past tense, and the object in the ablative; thus,

"Thou shouldst not take amiss, beloved one, my looking;
For the nightingales take flight round the rose."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

With any past tense of a transitive verb used instead of the present tense, the agent بلبلان, which in the above example is in the nominative, would become بلبلان in the instrumental case.

Sometimes neither agent nor object is expressed, but is understood from something that has gone before or will transpire; as in the following example:

"They neither make INQUIRY of, nor cast a LOOK towards each other:

Back to back they pass along, the friends and acquaintances of this world."—Æabd-ul-Hamīd,

IX.—The ism-i-ḥāliah, or indefinite participle, is used as a mode of action indefinite as to time or place, in three different ways.

First.—When the agent is not expressed, but understood from something which has passed or which follows, and the ism-i-ḥāliah is placed in the ablative case, whether the verb be transitive or intransitive; as in the following extracts:

"Whenever a person may appear in a place of worship, for every footstep which he takes, twelve good actions will be written, both on coming and on going."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"I said I should flee from these to some place or other;
But they by RUNNING seized me very quickly."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

Second.—The ism-i-maṣdar and the ism-i-ḥāliah is the مضاف, or governing noun, in the relation of the ablative case to the مضاف اليه, the object in the genitive case; as in the following extracts:

"With much joy and delight he made a royal feast,

On account of the ARRIVAL of that youth—Hasan Mīmundī."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

"When making thy supplication raise the hands, and recall to thy heart thy sins:

Moisten both thy eyes by SHEDDING tears of purity and innocence."—Rashīd-ul-By'ān.

Third.—The ism-i-hāliah is (as I have already shown at pages 72—75) commonly used as a simple indefinite participle, at which time it is neither مفاف nor neither مفاف, neither inflected nor used with an auxiliary. The following are examples:

"It is stated in the Sirājī, that the PUTTING ASIDE of alms* is necessary and right, both to the freeman and to the rich."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"Although ascending from earth to heaven is a weighty matter;

Yet this journey is attained with but one footstep of piety and sincerity."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

442.—Another class of nouns is obtained from the third persons of the past tenses of verbs: as,

"Confound that SITTING and RISING, though it may be on a throne, Which ever riseth with jealousy, and sitteth with envy."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

443.—The imperatives of some verbs also furnish another description of derivative nouns, and of which the following is an example:

"TRADE and TRAFFIC, BUYING and SELLING, are all in the hands of others:

There is neither an opening or commencement here for me nor for thee."—Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

THE PUSHTO NUMERALS.

is'mā'e æadad.

444.—The Cardinal Numbers with the Pushto names and the Arabic figures which are used to represent them, are as follows:

The first number y becomes y or y in the oblique cases; and before a feminine noun it takes y, and is liable to the same changes for number and case as other adjectives. The other numerals being plural, take the inflected form of the plural, and are not subject to any other changes for gender or number.

THE ORDINAL NUMBERS.

نهای مشتقه is-mā'e mushtaķa'h.

445. The ordinal numbers in this language are formed in a similar manner to the Persian ordinals, with the exception of the first, by affixing . The changes to which they are subject for gender, number, and case, have been already described at paragraph 89.

CHAPTER X.

THE SYNTAX.

,si naho.

450. I have generally fully explained the different peculiarities and exceptions of the various rules of each part of speech under their respective heads, and but little remains to be described beyond a few remarks peculiar to the idiom of the language.

As regards the order of words in a sentence, the chief circumstances to be borne in mind are, that the nominative should, properly, appear first in the sentence, and the adjective precede the substantive. Nouns in the different cases, as required, and a participle or adverb may follow, but the verb should terminate the sentence. In poetry, and in some styles of prose also, greater license is taken and allowed, the Afghān poets, like those of other nations, varying the dispositions of the words as they consider most suitable to the numbers and tendency of their poems.

The order and arrangement of words will be seen from the following extracts, as well as from the numerous examples already given, and also in the idiomatical tales inserted in the Appendix for this purpose.

بلبل ژبه دَ شكرګذاري پرانته شكر ئي دَ بارِ تعالى په څاي راوړ نور ئي وُ وِ تا له ما سره نيكي وُ كړه البته پاداش دَ دي نيكي نيكي بويه وُ پوهيږه چه تر دي وني لاندِ پټ وُ لاړي <sup>چلم</sup>چي دي دَ زرو والبته پاداش دَ دي نيكي نيكي بويه وُ پوهيږه چه تر دي وني لاندِ پټ وُ لاړي <sup>چلم</sup>چي دي دَ زرو والبته پاداش دَ دي نيكي نيكي نيكي بويه وُ په خپل كار ئي خرڅ كړه

"The nightingale opened the mouth of gratitude and gave thanks unto the Almighty. Then he said, 'Thou hast acted kindly with me, and certainly the return of such goodness should also be goodness. Know that beneath this tree there is concealed a vessel full of gold—take it and spend it in thy necessities.'"—Kalīlah no Damnah.

میسرد نوماندِ قدیم دَ مُرتضي علي دَ خوني مرقي عبد الصمد هم ور ته نوم وایه کیده مال متاع چه خپلو واړٌ سره ویش کړ دي په ویش کښ بیا په بخره دَ حسین وُ رسیده ډیره مینه به کوله ده په لویو په هلکو

"Maiy'sarah by name, there was an old house-born slave of Murtazā Æalī, who was also called by the name of Æabd-uṣ-Ṣamad. When the relatives divided the goods and chattels amongst themselves, this (slave) fell to the lot of Ḥusain in the distribution; and he used to show great affection both towards the elders and the juniors of the family."—Hasan and Ḥusain.

NOUNS.

451. When nouns of different genders occur in the same sentence, the adjective, the verb, or the participle, governed by them in common, must take the masculine form; as,

"The Prince, Nashūrbānū, the Queen—all these were seated together in one apartment,
The whole night they passed together in pleasure, until the light of day became Apparent."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

Whenever a noun is to be used in the same sentence with another, which is more immediately acted upon by a verb, the former must be put in the accusative case,* which in Pushto is the same as the nominative; thus,

"These deceivers act in this manner—they give VICTUALS unto the people, and they bias THE WORLD towards themselves."—Fanā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

The particle  $\delta$ , which governs the genitive case, generally precedes the noun it governs, the  $\delta$  or governing noun immediately preceding it likewise; but it may also precede the governing as well as the noun governed. Example:

"One day the owner of the garden was sitting amusing himself by viewing the beautiful roses, when he beheld a nightingale, which continued rubbing its face on the leaves of a flower, and uttering loud lamentations, was separating its golden leaves with its sharp beak."—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

When two nouns in the ablative case come together in a sentence, the  $(\angle)$  or s, the sign of the case, is only used with the last; thus,

"Freedom and independence, and the affairs of the world, are far distant from each other: Take off thy hands from the BUSINESS OF THE WORLD, if thou doeth anything."

-Æabd-ur-Rahmān.

In poetry, when the length of the rhyme requires it, the ablative sign may be altogether omitted.

ADJECTIVES.

452. The adjective must always agree with its noun in gender, case, and number, except with an uninflected masculine noun in the plural number, when the adjective is used in the singular. Examples:

"Black eyes; sable locks; dark eyebrows;

These are all gloomy calamities and Man-devourers."—Aabd-ul-Hamid.

"In the world the roses of spring are MANIFOLD in number,
If thou lamentest like the nightingale, oh heart of mine!—Ahmad Shāh, Abdālī.

When any other than the first numeral adjective is used with nouns in the masculine gender, it is most generally inflected, and takes (—) or s; but occasionally the noun takes the plural form, and both forms may even be used in the same sentence; as in the following examples:

"I then sent for the Khattak force, and the Muhmandīs and Aorīā Khels, to the amount of four or five hundred persons, came to my assistance. It was my intention to bring along with me to Khwarr, the Shāhī Mūshak clan together with their families, so I went to them and made them march off."— $Afzal\ Khān$ ; Tārīdd-i-Muraṣṣaæ.

"There were at a guess about seven hundred thousand horses and camels also; One hundred thousand wild asses too, with buffaloes, cows, and deer."

-Saif-ul-Mulūk.

When numeral adjectives are used with feminine nouns, the latter take the plural form without exception; as,

"In this manner for TEX NIGHTS and DAYS there was such a princely party: The whole tribe were greatly delighted at this assembly."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

When the first numeral adjective is used with nouns, it is subject to the same changes for gender, number, and case, as the noun it qualifies. The remainder take the plural inflected form in the oblique cases; thus,

"If she maketh a promise of one ноик in any matter,
I have no hope of the fulfilment of the affair in a year."— Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

PRONOUNS.

453. In the different tenses of intransitive verbs, and in the present, future, and agrist of transitives, in which the affixed personal pronouns (ضماير متصله) are used, the separate personal pronouns (ضماير متفله) may be altogether omitted, as in Persian, Arabic and Hebrew, or may be used with them; and when the meaning is clear without them, they may be dropped in the third person singular and plural of intransitives also. Example:

"I am living merely on the recollection of my sweetheart:
Alas! I shall never exist without my beloved."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

In the following example, an affixed personal pronoun in the dative case has been joined to the past tense of a transitive verb, and the regular personal pronoun s; also used; and although it refers to the same object in the sentence, it is not inflected. The meaning would be complete and clear without the s;, and to put it in the dative form so to or so would be incorrect, unless the affixed pronoun be removed. It must therefore be borne in mind, that in using a separate personal pronoun with an affixed one in the dative case, which it naturally assumes when used with the past tense of a transitive verb, the former must retain the uninflected form; thus,

"Grief on account of the beloved hath made ME wretched; anguish for her hath made ME ill indeed.

Why should not my heart be sad? when in my mind I think of her flowing tresses."

-Ahmad Shāh, Abdālī.

It should also be remarked that the last word of this example, is is the first person singular of the present tense, although written precisely in the same manner as the past with affixed pronoun in the preceding line; and the affixed personal pronoun is in the nominative case.

Personal pronouns may occasionally be met with in the inflected form of the dative case without the governing particles, and written in the same manner as the instrumental form of the pronoun. They are, however, comparatively rare.

"I show contrition, yet I commit sin; but Thou seest ME oh Creator!
I am a poor weak mortal; oh concealer of faults, become Thou my screen!"

-Khūshḥāl Khān, Khattak.

A verb is often used in construction without any noun or pronoun expressed. Under these circumstances some such word as or or point,' 'matter,' 'affair,' 'concern,' etc., is generally understood; as in the following example:

"At all events, whatever hath been decreed by fate will happen; Although a person may have never cast his eyes on destiny."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

If speaking of one's-self with another, preference is given to the first person in the first instance. The Afghāns being a plain spoken race, too, use the singular and not the plural form of the pronoun, as in English, when referring to one person only. Example:

 $^{\prime\prime}I$  and thou are both the slaves of one master, and the dependents of the audience hall of the Sovereign.

I am never at rest from my duty, for I am ever with my head in the desert."—Gulistān.

When a third person is mentioned, the words of the speaker himself must be repeated instead of using the third person, as in English; thus,

"When he recollects that 'the Kaæda'h* has not been performed by ME,' if he be near unto the sitting posture, he should return to that posture and perform the Kaæda'h.—Fawā'īd-ush-Sharī'æa'h.

"They did not know at all in their minds as to 'where we go,'t Neither did they distinguish what country it is, or what place."—Saif-ul-Mulūk.

The pronoun is used for the third person, but generally in a demonstrative sense with reference to a distant object; and by way of discrimination, the pronoun

ري, or ان must be used, in the same way as we use this and that in English. The following is an example:

"Muæa'wiyah said, 'An arrow hath pierced my heart, and in the end the wound will give forth bloody water. I have neither acquired this (world) nor that, and I know not what answer I shall make to the Giver of all good at the last day.—Hasan and Husain.

When the use of a second pronoun is required to refer to the same thing as the subject of the sentence or nominative before the verb, the common or reflective pronoun خيل must be used. Examples:

"Oh! Mīrzā, He himself glorifieth himself,

And unto Mīrzā His favour and beneficence is extended."—Mīrzā Khān, Ansārī.

"It is the season of spring; the nightingale laments and bewails;

His heart is filled with anguish; the ROSE is inebriated with ITS OWN intoxication."

-Aḥmad Shāh, Abdātī.

When a pronoun in the second number of a sentence refers to the same subject or thing as the nominative or subject of the verb in the first, the personal and particular pronoun must be used instead of the reflective or reciprocal; thus,

"Alas! that before death I had once reached such a river, whose waves having flowed to my knees, I had filled my water-vessel according to the wish of my heart.—Gulistān.

The common or reflective pronoun may also be used in a substantive sense, as in the following:

"The strangers and HER own (relations) also said unto her, 'The sending away of the Prophet was not necessary on thy part.' They rebuked  $\underline{Kh}$ adīja'h, and she stood reproved before him."— $Tamallud\ N\bar{a}ma'h$ .

is also joined to nouns and pronouns by way of identity, peculiarity, or emphasis; as in the following extract:

"God Almighty німѕеіғ hath said, 'Whoever hath placed his hand on the Kur'ān, congratulate him, oh Faithful!'"—Makhzan Afghānī.

The pronoun &, used both as an interrogative and an indefinite, although not applicable to persons generally, is often used to express scorn or astonishment; as in the following examples:

"Inquire not of the vulgar concerning the anxiety and care of Hamīd.

What knoweth the mat-weaver regarding the value of cloth of gold?— **Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

"What unfortunate hard grain I am, I cannot imagine; Since I do not become ground in the mill-stones of absence."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

It may also be used in a discriminative or characteristic sense; thus,

"WHETHER ruler or subject, or WHETHER foreign or strange; The whole world is mounted on the tail of calamity and evil."—Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

The adverb چرته is used emphatically to denote dissimilarity, contrariety, and non-existence between matters or things; as,

"Where the lips of the beloved? where the sorrow of heart and soul? Where the nightshade's red berry? and where the ruby of Badakhshān?"

-Æabd-ur-Raḥman,

"Since people barter their faith for the world's wealth, they are fools;
Where is fifty days? and where eternity and everlasting life?"—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

VERBS.

454. Transitive verbs in any past tense of the active voice must agree with the object in gender and number, whether it may or may not be put in the oblique case; as in the following extracts:

"Bahrām released that damsel from confinement:

He drew her out from inside the well."—Bahrām Gūr.

"King Sūlīmān opened the covering with his own hand:
To him became apparent a portrait of his beloved mistress."— Saif-ul-Mulāk.

In the preceding examples, the objects are feminine and the verbs also.

The agent, as already explained, is used in the instrumental case, and takes the inflected form when capable of inflection. The agents in the preceding extracts were not capable of change: in the following example the agent is becomes jets:

"He who yesterday commiserated and condoled with my sorrow and grief, DESTINY to-day made that friend of mine sanguinary and cruel."—**Eabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

Pushto nouns have no particular terminations for the objective ease; it is distinguished merely by its position, which properly is after the agent and before the verb, when both agent and object are used in the third person. In all other instances the object may be known by the gender and number which the verb assumes to agree with it; and by the affixed personal pronouns, which, as in the Semitic dialects, point out the objective case. Examples:

"When Aorang MADE BAHRĀM ACQUAINTED with this circumstance, Care and anxiety excited HIM: he became perplexed and distracted.—Bahrām Gūr.

"At the skirt of the mountain HE PERCEIVED A dark CAVE; and a man of enlightened mind was seated at the mouth of the cavern, free from the disquietude of strangers.—Kalīlah wo Damnah.

"The slave previous to this had never beheld the sea, and had never experienced the annoyance and inconvenience of a boat. He commenced to weep and lament.—Gulistān.

Reverse the order in these examples and the meaning is also reversed. Thus, in the first, اورنگ would be the agent and اورنگ the object; and in the last, دریاب would be the agent and مریی

There are some transitive verbs, such as ... 'to speak,' and ... 'to look at,' 'to observe,' with which it is absolutely necessary that the object be put in the dative case, without which the sentence would convey no meaning. The following are examples:

"The Queen SPOKE PRIVATELY UNTO HER MOTHER,
And with this circumstance she also acquainted Badrī."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

"Adam Khān said unto Balo, 'Go thou and bring him;' and when he went and brought him, the Mullā said unto him, 'Let the women go away, then I will come to thee.'"—Tale of Adam Khān and Durkhāna'ī.

In sentences where there may be two objective eases, the one denoting the object and the other the person, the object of the transitive verb must be put in the dative ease. Examples:

"Since I cast my eyes Towards this rosy-cheeked one, With those eyes I shed tears of blood."—Æabd-ur-Raḥmān.

"When he caused Bahrām to be decked out in a suit of clothes, The blaze of his beauty became greater than the sun."— $Bahr\bar{a}m$   $G\bar{u}r$ .

The dative case is sometimes used instead of the genitive to express relation or possession; as,

"That curiosity which father had sent for ME,

Came to my recollection at that very hour and time."—Saif-ul-Mulāk.

"Oh thou for ever fascinated and distracted with the cares of the flesh!

Why awaken for thy life and soul sleeping calamity and misfortune?"

- Æabd-ul-Hamīd.

The infinitive form of the verb, besides its other uses already described, is also used to denote the absolute necessity of an action; thus,

"Moreover, that which is legal and right it is necessary to ACCOUNT lawful; And that which is prohibited and unlawful it is necessary to ACCOUNT so."

__Rashīd-ul-By'ān.

The past tense of a verb is often used in a future sense, as in the following extracts:

"If absence shall make me sad, or grief on grief shall at night attack me;

I WILL make thy name my helper, oh! thou Redresser of Wrongs! oh! thou Selected One!"

— Aḥmad Shāh, Abdālī.

"Oh! gentle gale! if thou WILT BRING news of the beloved;
Thou wilt remove the absence-burned spots from the heart."—Aḥmad Shāh, Abdātī.

The present tense in many instances may also be used in a future signification; as,

"The rapture and bliss of Paradise WILL BE nothing in his eyes,
When the beloved displayeth one of the charms of her countenance."

_ Eabd-ul-Hamid.

"Six brothers, together with the army, we will all go with thee;
And whatever tasks thou WILT IMPOSE, those we will perform."—Bahrām Gūr.

"I SHALL HAVE no concern on account of the bitterness of death,
If my beloved may be seated by the pillow at the head of my bed."— *Eabd-ul-Ḥamūd.

455. The past participles of Pushto verbs are sometimes used as past conjunctive participles, termed مانتي معطوف عليه, in the same manner as in the Persian language. This is a very useful form of the verb, although not very commonly used. It expresses the performance of something previous to another action, which is indicated by the verb following; and serves to conjoin the different members of a sentence. Example:

"How shall I now weep after the rocks and the shrubs of my country?

HAVING MADE my parting salutation, I bade them farewell."

-Ashraf Khān, Khattak.

456. Two words which resemble each other in sound, are often adopted when one alone would be sufficient; but one of the words, generally the latter, has no signification, and is used merely for the sake of sound. Examples:

"For the sake of the profit of the world, it behoveth not That thou shouldest REND the collar of any one's fair fame."— Eabd-ul-Hamid.

"With the insnared heart in the noose of curly locks entangled,
The mind maketh false arbitration regarding discretion and caution."

_Æabd-ul-Ḥamīd.

THE AFRIDI AND THE MULLA.

A certain Afrīdī, being desirous of learning to read, went into a village to a Mullā and said it would be a great favour if he would teach him. The Mullā asked him whether he had learnt anything previously; but the Afrīdī told him that he had not as yet learned to read. The Mullā then asked him what he would like to commence with; and the latter replied, that he would do as the tutor might direct. The Mullā then told him that, in the first place, he should get the Alphabet by heart, and afterwards commence reading the first section of the Kur'ān; to which the Afrīdī having agreed, he was requested to come the following morning.

When the Afridi made his appearance the next day, the Mulli, taking the Alphabet in his hand, pointed out the first letter, and requesting his scholar to repeat after him, said "Alif." "Alup," repeated the Afridi. "That is not the pronunciation," said the teacher, "repeat exactly as I say, Alif." "Alup," says the Afrīdī again, with the greatest innocence possible. "Do not pronounce it so," said the Mulla, "call it Alif;" and the Afrīdī, like an obedient pupil, obeying his instructor to the letter, said, "Do not pronounce it so, call it Alup." The Mulla again said, "That is not correct, I say: call it Alif." "That is not correct, I say: call it Alup," said the Afrīdī. The Mullā, who was not a second Job, now losing all patience, said, "Oh! infidel, eall it Alif," on which the Afrīdī replied, "Oh! infidel, call it Alup." The Mulla at this, becoming very angry, gave the Afridi a box on The latter now thought within himself, "Master commanded me to repeat whatever he said, and doubtless it is necessary that I should also do as he does;" so thinking this a part of the lesson, he dealt the Mulla a hearty box on the ear in return. At this specimen of Afrīdīness, the latter, becoming more enraged than ever, seized the Afrīdī by the throat; and the pupil, obeying his master to the letter, seized him by the throat also. In this state they both rose from their squatting position and commenced wrestling. At length the Afrīdī, having the advantage in strength, succeeded, with little trouble, in laying the Mulla at full length on his back, and seated himself on his breast, at the same time looking towards him in expectation that he would go on with the lesson.

In this unpleasant situation, it struck the Mullā that his amiable pupil might probably have taken his words, "to imitate him," in too literal a light, and that possibly he might be only imitating him in this instance; so, taking his hands off the Afrīdī, he exclaimed, "Oh! Infidel, let me go." The Afrīdī replied, "Oh! Infidel, let me go," and allowed the Mullā to get up; after which he said, "Master! that was not a good lesson by any means; it was a hard fight." The Mullā answered, "You speak truly; to-morrow it will come to swords." "If such is the case," said the Afrīdī, "I will go home and fetch mine," and he set out accordingly. The Mullā, glad of this opportunity, thought there was no time to be lost; and that very night he made himself scarce.

THE OLD MAN AND THE DOCTOR.

An old man complained to a doctor of bad digestion. "Oh! let bad digestion alone," said the doctor, "for it is one of the concomitants of old age." He then stated his weakness of sight. "Don't meddle with weakness of sight," replied the doctor, "for that also is one of the concomitants of old age." He complained to him of difficulty of hearing. "Alas! how distant is hearing," said the doctor, "from old men! difficulty of hearing is a steady concomitant of old age." He complained to him of want of sleep. "How widely separated," said the doctor, "are sleep and old men: for want of sleep is certainly a concomitant of old age." He complained to him of a decrease of bodily vigour. "This is an evil," replied the doctor, "that soon hastens on old men: for want of vigour is a necessary concomitant of old age." The old man (unable to keep his patience any longer) called out to his companions—

"Seize upon the booby! lay hold of the blockhead! drag along the ignorant idiot! that dolt of a doctor, who understands nothing, and who has nothing to distinguish him from a parrot, but the human figure, with his concomitants of old age, forsooth! the only words he seems capable of uttering." The doctor smiled, and said, "Come my old boy, get into a passion, for this also is a concomitant of old age."

UMBSUR—THE JOY OF HIS PARENTS.

I resided at Baṣrah, said a certain Arabian Yorick, as a parson and professor of humanity, and was one day a good deal amused by a strange fellow, squint-eyed, straddle-footed, lame of both legs, with rotten teeth, stammering tongue, staggering in his gait like a man intoxicated, puffing and blowing like a thirsty dog, and foaming at the mouth like an angry camel, who came up and seated himself before me. "Whence come you," said I, "Oh father of gladness?" "From home, please your worship," said he. "And pray where is your home?" I rejoined, "and what is the cause of your journey?" "My home," he replied, "is near the great mosque, adjoining the poor-house, and I am come for the purpose of being married, and to beg you will perform the ceremony. The object of my choice is this long-tongued, importunate, hump-backed, scarlet-skinned, one-eyed, pug-nosed, stinking, deaf, wide-mouthed daughter of my uncle." "Do you agree, Miss Long-tongue," said I, "to marry this Mr. Pot-belly?" "Ay," said the lady (with a great deal of Doric brevity). "Then accept, my friend," cried I, "this woman for your wife; take her home, cherish and protect her." So he took her by the hand and departed.

Now it happened that, about nine months after this event, they both returned to me rejoicing, and they had hardly seated themselves, when my old friend Adonis called out, "Oh, your worship! we have been blessed with a most sweet and fascinating child, and are come to request you will bless and give him a name, and offer up a prayer for his parents." Now, what should I behold but a little urchin, stone-blind, hare-lipped, without the use of its hands, splay-footed, bald-headed, ass-eared, bull-necked, not possessing one sense out of the five, and altogether frightful and deformed; in short, a perfect epitome of all the qualities of his parents. At this sight I said to them, "Be thankful for this darling boy, and call him Umbsur,* for truly he has all your perfections combined in himself, and that child is admirable indeed who resembles his parents."
